It was my first time to go hiking in the country for pleasure and wild adventure. Our trainer who doubled as a guide told us that it was another tough form of exercise.

Earlier, our team, consisting of fifteen members had bought some equipment and things we required in the hike. Some of the things we bought were extra heavy clothing, energy drinks, sunglasses, hats and flash lights. We hired a minibus and our journey commenced at 6.am early in the morning.

Three hours later, we were at Kifaru hills. The trekking began immediately. The route we took was full of natural beauty. Cascading waterfalls, indigenous trees, birds and animals beautified the place. We walked slowly enjoying whatever mother nature had to offer. We took many captivating photographs.

After a four-hour walk, our stomachs were yearning for something. We chose an open grassland and set a wild fire. We delegated different duties to one another and the meal was ready within no time. The food tasted more delicious than the usual meals; probably because it was prepared using firewood.

Our hiking to Kifaru hills was a piece of heaven on earth. It widened our knowledge and experiences that never existed before.

One day he took a poor form of a beggar and toured a certain village. He knocked at the homestead of a farmer to seek for some rest and food. The farmer welcomed him with both hands and his wife, who was a generous and kind woman gave him some bread and a cup of tea. She also gave him an armchair to rest his tired bones.

Kajuju was much impressed with the kindness of the farmer and his wife but he was quick to notice that, though everything looked neat and tranquil, they seemed both to be unhappy. "I am tired of being an ordinary bird. Please, give me a wonderful set of feathers to make me unique," he begged the goddess.

The goddess of beauty agreed and instantly, the peacock was clothed with a fine tail of sparkling feathers. He strutted proudly among the birds. They were all jealous of his stunning beauty.

Later, the peacock saw an eagle gliding high up in the sky and a sudden urge to fly up to join him disturbed him.
