Introduction

CTH 847 'African Church Leaders' is a one semester, two units' undergraduate course. Presently, it is a requirement for those who wish to obtain bachelors degree in Christian Theology. The course will consist of fourteen units, divided into three modules. Module one discusses on the Introduction of the gospel to Africa and the biography of some selected pioneer leaders. Module two discusses the life and ministry of selected past leaders and the spread of the gospel in Africa, while Module three discusses Selected Christian Leaders presently influencing the stability and growth of the gospel in Africa. The materials have been developed to suit a Nigerian studying at a distance.

This course guide tells you briefly what the course is about, what course materials you will be using and how you are to use them. It provides some general guidelines for the amount of time you might be spending in order to successfully complete each unit of the course. It also gives you some guidance on your tutor-marked assignments, details of which are to be found in a separate 'assignment file'. The course involves regular tutorials and you are advised to attend the sessions.

What You Will Learn In This Course

This course does not presume that you have a pre-knowledge of African Church Leaders. As a result, you are going to be assisted to build up a repertoire of knowledge on the contributions of African Church Leaders. You will come to realise that the study of African Church Leaders is not just an academic discipline, but it is necessary for daily living and spiritual life. You will come to appreciate that even your little contributions as a Christian towards changing the life of others which is the responsibility of every Christian helps to spread the gospel of Jesus. The course will be ecumenical in its approach. With this method, it will not seek to adopt the history of any particular church or denomination. Neither will it use the official documents on African Church Leaders of any particular church or denomination. This course will seek to take a centrist approach to the discussion on African Church Leaders which will be of interest to the generality of Christians.

This course will first take you through the brief history of Christianity in Africa and the spread of Christianity in Africa. The course will further review the contributions of Bishop Samuel Ajayi Crowther, Moses Ladejo Stone, William Wade Harris, Agbebi Mojola, Isaiah Shembe and Garrick Braide to the spread of Christianity in Africa.

The course will also explore the contributions of Orimolade Moses, Samuel Oschoffa, Joseph Babalola and Benson Idahosa to the spread and growth of Christianity in Africa. These African leaders were responsible for starting the African independent Churches, which took into consideration the culture and language of the African people. These African independent churches helped Christianity to take root and spread among the African people.

Furthermore, in this course, you will come to study the contributions of selected Christian leaders presently influencing the stability and growth of the gospel. Such leaders include Bishop Peter Akinola, Pastor Williams Folunrosho Kumuyi, Pastor Enoch Adejare Adebayo, Bishop David Oyedepo and Pastor Daniel Olukoya. These men have taken African Christianity to the global stage such that Africa is shaping the image of Christianity today.

In view of this, you have an exciting course, “African Church Leaders” ahead of you. Harmonize what you will learn in this course with your personal reflections and take time to put what you study and reflect on into practice. A general bibliography of all the reference works used in preparing the course guide is given towards the end of this course guide. Hopefully, your use of these will enable you to deepen your knowledge in other areas of your interest, which the course content may barely treat. Again, you will notice that there are many biblical references and quotations given in this course. Please note that all the biblical quotations used in this course are taken from (1990) The New Revised Standard Version (NRSV), Nashville: Thomas Nelson Publishers.

Course Aims

The aim of this course can be summarized as follows: The general aim of the course is to acquaint you with the contributions of African Church Leaders to the growth and stability of Christianity in Africa. This course specifically aims to help you appreciate their heroic sacrifice, presentations and the suffering they encountered on the basis of their faith.

Course Objective

In order to achieve the aim listed above, the course sets overall objectives. In addition, each unit has its own specific objectives, which are always outlined at the beginning of that unit. You should read them before you start working through the unit. It is necessary to refer to them during your study of the unit, to check on your progress. Also, after completing a unit, you should glance through the unit objectives. This will enable you to be sure that you have done what was required of you by the unit.

Listed below are the wider objectives of the course as a whole. By meeting these objectives, you will have achieved the aim of the course as a whole. On successful completion of the course, you should be able to:

- Explain the history of Christianity in Africa
- Discuss the spread of Christianity in Africa
- Describe the Contributions of Pioneers like Samuel Ajayi Crowther, Moses Stone, William Wade, Agbebi Mojola, Isaiah Shembe and Braide Garrick to the growth of Christianity in Africa
- Explain the emergence of African independent Churches
- Enumerate the contributions of Moses Orimolade, Samuel Oschoffa, Joseph Babalola and Benson Idahosa to the spread of Christianity in Africa
- Discuss the mighty revivals experienced during the ministry of these selected African leaders
- Describe the contributions of Africa Christian leaders like Peter Akinola, William Kumuyi, Enoch Adeboye, David Oyedepo and Daniel Olukoya who have positively impacted on the stability and spread of Christianity both in Africa and in the world at large.
- Understand the Importance of a call to ministry

- Derive inspiration for your personal life from the life and ministry of the African leaders discussed in this course.

Working through this course

To complete this course, you are required to read the study units, read the recommended books and read other materials provided by the National Open University of Nigeria (NOUN), which will help you achieve the objectives of the course. Each unit contains some self-assessment exercises and at some points in the course, you are required to submit assignments for assessment purpose. At the end of this course there is a final examination. Stated below are the components of the course and what you have to do. The course should take about fourteen weeks to cover.

Course Materials

Major components of the course are:

1. Course guide
2. Study units
3. Textbooks
4. Assignment file
5. Presentation schedule

In addition, you must obtain the materials. Obtain your copy. You may contact your tutor if you have problems in obtaining the text materials.

STUDY UNITS

There are fourteen study units in this course divided into 3 modules of 5 units, 4 units and 5 units respectively. They are as follows:

Module 1: Pioneer African Leaders and the Introduction of Christianity to Africa

Unit 1 Brief history of Christianity in Africa

Unit 2 The spread of Christianity in Africa

Unit 3 Crowther, Samuel Ajayi

Unit 4 Stone, Moses Ladejo

Unit 5 Brief Notes on William Wade Harris, Agbebi Mojola (David) Brown Vincent), Shembe Isaiah Midiwamafa

Module 2: A Selection of Past Christian Leaders and the Spread of the Gospel in Africa

Unit 1 Moses Orimolade Tunolase

Unit 2 Oschoffa Samuel Bilewu

Unit 3 Babalola Joseph Ayodele

Unit 4 Idahosa Benson Andrew

Module 3: Selected Christian Leaders Presently Influencing the Stability and Growth of Christianity in Africa

Unit 1 Peter Akinola

Unit 2 William Folunrosho Kumuyi

Unit 3 Enoch Adejare Adeboye

Unit 4 David Olaniyi Oyedepo

Unit 5 Daniel Kolawole olukoya

Each unit includes a table of contents, introduction, specific objectives, recommended textbooks and summaries of key issues and ideas. At intervals in each unit, you will be provided with a number of exercises or self-assessment questions. These are to help you test yourself on the material you have just covered or to apply it in some way. The value of these self-tests is to help you gauge your progress and to reinforce your understanding of the material. At least one tutor-marked assignment will be provided at the end of each unit. The exercises and the tutor-marked assignments will help you in achieving the stated learning objectives of the individual units and of the course.

Assignment File

In this file, you will find all the details of the work you must submit to your tutor for marking. The marks you obtain from these assignments will count towards the final mark you obtain for this course. Further information on assignments will be found in the assignment file itself and later in this Course Guide in the section on assessment.

Presentation Schedule

The presentation schedule included in your course materials gives you important dates for the completion of tutor-marked assignments and attending tutorials. Remember, you are required to submit all your assignments by the due date. You should guard against falling behind in your work.

Assessment

There are two aspects to the assessment of the course. First are the tutor-marked assignments; second, there is a written examination. In tackling the assignments, you are expected to apply information and knowledge acquired during the course.

The assignments must be submitted to your tutor for formal assessment in accordance with the deadlines stated in the Assignment File. The work you submit to your tutor for assessment will count 30% of your total course mark. At the end of the course, you will need to sit for a final three-hour examination. This will count for 70% of your total course mark.

Tutor-Marked Assignments

There are fourteen tutor-marked assignments in this course. You need to submit all the assignments. The best four (i.e. the highest four of the fourteen assignments) will be counted. The total marks for the best four (4) assignments will be 30% of your total course mark. Assignment questions for the units in this course are contained in the Assignment File. You should be able to complete your assignments from the information and materials contained in your set textbooks, reading and study units. However, you are advised to use other references to broaden your viewpoint and provide a deeper understanding of the subject.

When you have completed each assignment, send it, together with TMA (tutor-marked assignment) form to your tutor. Make sure that each assignment reaches your tutor on or before the deadline given in the Assignment File. If, however, you cannot complete your work on time, contact your tutor before the assignment is due to discuss the possibility of an extension.

Final Examination and Grading

The final examination CTH 214 will be of three hours' duration and have a value of 70% of the total course grade. The examination will consist of questions which reflect the type of self-testing, practice exercise and tutor-marked problems you have come across. All areas of the course will be assessed. You are advised to revise the entire course after studying the last unit before you sit for the examination. You will find it useful to review your tutor-marked assignments and the comments of your tutor on them before the final examination.

Course Marking Scheme

This table shows how the actual course marking is broken down.

Assignment	Marks
Assignment 1-4	Four assignments, best three marks of the four count at 30% of course marks

Final Examination	70% of overall course marks
Total	100% of course marks

In distance learning, the study units replace the university lecture. This is one of the great advantages of distance learning, you can read and work through specially designed study materials at your own pace, and at a time and place that suit you best. Think of it as reading the lecture instead of listening to a lecturer in the same way that a lecturer might set books or other material. Just as a lecturer might set you some reading to do, the study units tell you when to read your set books or other material. Just as a lecturer might give you an in-class exercise, your study units provide exercises for you to do at appropriate points.

Each of the study units' follows a common format .The first item is an introduction to the subject matter of the unit and how a particular unit is integrated with the other units and the course as a whole. Next is a set of learning objectives. These objectives let you know what you should be able to do by the time you have completed the unit. You should use these objectives to guide your study. When you have finished the units you must go back and check whether you have achieved the objectives. If you make a habit of doing this you will significantly improve your chances of passing the course. The main body of the unit guides you through the required reading from other sources. This will usually be either from your set books or from internet resources.

Reading section

Remember that your tutor's job is to help you. When you need help, don't hesitate to call and ask your tutor to provide it.

- 1) Read this course guide thoroughly
- 2) Organize a study schedule. Refer to the "course overview" for more details. Note the time you are expected to spend on each unit and how the assignments relate to the units. Whatever method you choose to use, you should decide on and write in your own dates for working on each unit.
- 3) Once you have created your own study schedule, do everything you can to stick to it. The major reason that students fail is that they get behind with their course work, if you get into difficulties with your schedule, please let your tutor know before it is too late for help.
- 4) Turn to unit 1 and read the introduction and the objectives for the unit.
- 5) Assemble the study materials. Information about what you need for a unit is given in the overview at the beginning of each unit. You will almost always need the study unit you are working on and one of your set books on your desk at the same time.
- 6) Work through the unit. The content of the unit itself has been arranged to provide a sequence for you to follow. As you work, through the unit you will be instructed to read sections from your set books or other articles. Use the unit to guide your reading.

- 7) Review the objectives for each study unit to conform that you have achieved them. If you feel unsure about any of the objectives, you can then start on the next unit. Proceed unit by unit through the course and try pace your study so that you keep yourself on schedule.
- 8) When you are confident that you have achieved a unit's objectives, you can then start on the next unit.
- 9) When you have submitted an assignment to your tutor for marking, do not wait for its return before starting on the next unit. Keep to your schedule. When the assignment is returned, pay particular attention to your tutor's comments, both on the tutor-marked assignment form and also on what is written on the assignment. Consult your tutor as soon as possible if you have any questions or problems.
- 10) After completing the last unit, review the course and prepare yourself for the final examination. Check that you have achieved the unit objectives (listed at the beginning of each unit) and the course objective (listed in the course guide).

Tutors and Tutorials

There are eight hours of tutorial provided in support of this course. You will be notified of the dates, times and location of these tutorials, together with the name and phone number of your tutor, as soon as you are allocated a tutorial group. Your tutor will mark and comment on your assignments, keep a close watch on your progress and on any difficulties you might encounter and provide assistance to you during the course. You must mail your tutor- marked assignments to your tutor well before the due date (at least two working days are required). They will be marked by your tutor and returned to you as soon as possible.

Do not hesitate to contact your tutor by telephone, e-mail, or discussion board if you need help. The following might be circumstances in which you will find help necessary. Contact your tutor if:

- you do not understand any part of the study units or the assigned readings
- you have difficulty with the self-tests or exercises

- You have a question or problem with an assignment with your tutor's comments on an assignment or with the grading of an assignment.

You should try your best to attend the tutorials. This is the only opportunity to have face to face contact with your tutor and to ask questions which are answered instantly. You can raise any problem encountered in the course of your study. To gain the maximum benefit from course tutorials, prepare a question list before attending them. You will learn a lot from participating in discussions actively.

Summary

CTH 214 intends to introduce you to the contributions of African Leaders to the growth and spread of Christianity. Upon completing this course, you will be able to answer some questions such as:

- How did Christianity spread to Africa
- What are the contributions of African Christian leaders to the spread of Christianity?
- What gave birth to African independent Churches?
- What is the importance of a call from God to ministry

The questions you will be able to answer are not limited to the above list. We wish you success in the course and hope that you will find it both interesting and useful in your day to day life.

1.0 Introduction

Christianity in Africa is not a recent happening, nor is it a by-product of colonialism; its roots go back to the very time of the Apostles. The church had been flourishing on the northern shore of the African continent for six hundred years before Islam was born. In those days Egypt and North Africa with their great theologians, such as Athanasius and Augustine, were the pillars of the universal church. In this unit we will take a look at a brief history of Christianity in Africa

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you should be able to;

- Discuss the introduction of Christianity to Africa
- List the names of Africans who contributed to early Christian theology
- Explain reasons why Christianity did not grow from North Africa to the rest of Africa

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 BRIEF HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY IN NORTH AFRICA

The history of Christianity in Africa probably began during the earthly ministry of Jesus Christ, two thousand years ago. The New Testament of the Bible mentions several events in which Africans were witnesses to the life of Christ and the ministry of the apostles. It is possible that the history of Christianity in Africa began when these Africans shared what they witnessed with other Africans. The Gospel of Luke records that a Cyrenian was compelled to bear the cross for Jesus, prior to Jesus' crucifixion. Cyrene was located in North Africa. The book of Acts records that, on the day of Pentecost, Egyptians and Cyrenians were among the crowd, and they heard the apostles proclaim the Gospel in their native languages. Acts also records the conversion of an influential Ethiopian eunuch to Christianity. Finally, the book of Acts records that following the apostles missionary journey to Cyprus, new converts from Cyprus and Cyrene preached the gospel to the Greeks of Antioch.

North Africans were the first to receive and embrace the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The early church in North Africa went through severe persecutions A.D. 64 through 311. In response, the church established the Catechetical Schools of Alexandria, among other similar schools of Christian instruction. Many significant leaders of the faith emerged from the early African church.

Persecutions in Egypt resulted in the dispersion of Christians to the innermost regions of Egypt. Egyptian churches spread the Gospel in the Coptic (Egyptian) language and planted churches throughout the interior of Egypt. However, Christianity, in the region, was weakened by theological and doctrinal controversies.

At the start of the seventh century, the Coptic Church had established itself as the national church and had penetrated every region of the country. Although Christianity began in North Africa several centuries before its introduction in Egypt, the church in North Africa did not grow as quickly because the North African church used the Latin language in its services and literature, rather than the language of the people.

SELF ASSESMENT EXERCISE 3.1

Discuss the reason (s) why Christianity did not spread from North Africa to the rest of Africa.

3.2 THE CONTINUITY OF CHRISTIAN PRESENCE IN AFRICA

The Church had been flourishing on the northern shore of the African continent for six hundred years before Islam was born. Christianity took root in North Africa at a very early date. Many important personalities in the early church came from this region, including great theologians, such as the church fathers Clement and Origen of Alexandria in Egypt, St. Augustine of Hippo, a city in present-day Algeria and Athanasius, were the pillars of the universal Church during their time.

From A.D. 100s to 400s, Christianity spread throughout much of North Africa. Perhaps the most important force in this development was the monastic movement, which began in Egypt and only later made its way to Europe. Unfortunately, through Arab occupation, starting in AD 640, the expansion of Christianity received a heavy blow. It died out entirely in North Africa yet has survived as an oppressed, though significant, minority in Egypt until the present time. The subsequent history of Christian presence in Africa is for many centuries like a trickling stream through the desert. Yet God's providence never let it dry up and in our days it has become a great flood watering the whole continent.

When Carthage, the last Christian stronghold in northern Africa, fell to the Arab assault in AD 697, there arose in the same year King Mercurios in Nubia who built up a Christian kingdom that reached from Aswan to the Blue Nile. When that kingdom succumbed to Turkish-Islamic attacks in AD 1270, there was a rebirth of the nine-hundred-year old Ethiopian Church. The restoration of the Solomonic dynasty under Yikunno Amlak and the religious reform by Takla Haymont, the great father of monasticism, brought new life to this uniquely African Christian kingdom. There was a flourishing Christian culture on the mountains of Ethiopia, equaling that of medieval Europe, until much of it was destroyed by an Islamic jihad which began in AD 1527.

But by that date, there was already another monarch carrying on the torch of faith: Afonso, king of the Kongo, the first Christian ruler south of the Sahara. For twenty years he worked untiringly to establish a Christian kingdom and in AD 1526, together with his son, Bishop Henrique, he outlined a program of evangelization to be carried to all the provinces of his realm. For over three hundred years, his successors were eager to maintain links with Rome; they brought as many as four hundred and forty Capuchins into the country in the course of a century and a half.

The Kongolese kings were still desperately calling for new missionaries from Rome, when in AD 1792 the first permanent mission in South Africa was erected by the Moravians and in West Africa, the first church was established by emancipated slaves returning from America: Freetown in Sierra Leone, thus inaugurating the modern era of Christianity in Africa. Indeed, in so many places, it was repatriated or liberated slaves who laid the foundation stones of the present African church. Their settlements formed the bases from which concerted efforts were made to bring the good news of the salvation in Christ to the tribal communities and into the very heart of the continent.

The pre-colonial period, from about AD 1800 to the AD 1880s, was truly the heroic age of modern missions. As proof of this, it may suffice to mention the one hundred Austrian missionaries who from AD 1852 to AD 1862 penetrated along the Nile up to Gondokoro in Southern Sudan. There they all succumbed to attacks of deadly fever, except the famous Comboni. Then there were the White Fathers who repeatedly attempted to cross the Sahara in the hope of reaching Timbuktu, the mysterious city of "Negroland", but on the way were killed by their guides. Of lasting influence were the numerous missionaries that followed the footsteps of the great pathfinder Livingstone whose activity opened the way for the subsequent missions to the Great Lakes and the Zaire Basin. While there were many set-backs during these early days and most missionary settlements were composed of free slaves, there also flourished some Christian communities composed of local people in such West African places as Cape Coast, Accra, Abeokuta, Lagos, the Niger Delta city states and Calabar. In East Africa, there was the nucleus of a Christian Bugunda kingdom at the court of the Kabaka.

The foundation of most of the African churches, however, took place during the colonial period: AD 1880- 1960. This age brought to Africa much of the modern infrastructure which greatly facilitated the work of evangelization. What the white man failed to understand at the time was how much the African had to suffer from this European invasion that placed a whole continent into a position of inferiority. Those who knew history approached the age of independence with serious doubts, would Christianity be swept together away with colonialism?

Today, after many years of Independence, two facts have emerged clearly. First, the African Christians were able to distinguish between the substance of Christianity and its European garb. Those who threw away both and either Islam or returned to the religion of their ancestors were an insignificant minority. The expulsion of missionaries was a transient phenomenon affecting a few countries only. The undisputable fact is that statistically by AD 1990 Christianity had become the majority religion in most countries south of the Sahara. West Africa is the notable exception. Yet even there, it has established itself beyond dispute and is a force to be reckoned with.

The second fact is that though Christianity is well established, it has its serious problems. One is the infiltration of secularism, especially evident in the burgeoning urban centres. A second problem is the disunity among the Christian denominations that has been inherited from the mother churches. More than in any other continent, this seemingly unending process of fragmentation continues and is fostered by a constant influx of new sects as well as by the African proclivity for grouping into smaller communities. This is most manifest in the indigenous Independent African Churches. The attraction which these groups begin to exercise on the educated population too hints to the third problem, that of inculturation. Though many Christians feel at home in the European garb of their church, and understand it as “traditional” Christianity, a growing number perceive the need of a deeper incarnation of their faith in the African personality. Most church leaders understood the need for inculturation, not its urgency. Much fewer seek suitable solutions that go beyond the singing of local hymns. One thing, however, is sure: African Christianity has made the bible its own, and at least African Catholicism also highly esteems the Sacraments. There is a well- founded hope that Africa will soon be not just a developing Third World continent but a third spiritual power between the Christianities of the East and the West, or, as the African prophet Blyden put it, well over a hundred years ago, “the spiritual reservoir of the world”.

A turning point in the development of ancient Christianity in Africa was the advent of Islam. It almost dried up the whole flow of Christian life: in time, the Church disappeared entirely from North Africa and Nubia. It was also heavily oppressed and restricted in Egypt, isolated and often attacked in Ethiopia. Between ancient and modern Christianity in Africa, there can be traced another Christian movement which pioneered the faith of the Gospel in the lands south of the Sahara. It was Christianity brought under the patronage of Portugal, whose seafarers were the first to circumnavigate the African continent. Although, this Christian faith never took strong roots in the African soil, it was still a reality of life for thousands of Africans during several generations, and in a few places even for two or three hundred thousand years, as in the kingdoms of Kongo, Angola, Warri and Zimbabwe.

A crucial role in this movement was played by Ethiopia, whose existence in the memory of Europe had practically become a myth. In their endeavors to contact the legendary king, Prester John, the Portuguese explorers came across two other powerful kings, the Mani Kongo in the West and Mwene Mutapa in the East. It was supposed that the whole of inner Africa was divided between these three kings, so that when Prester John would be reunited to Western Christendom, and Mani Kongo and Mwene Mutapa converted to the true faith, practically the whole of Africa beyond the Islamic belt would become Christian. This seemed to have been achieved in AD 1630: the Ethiopian king had effected his reunion with Rome, the kings of the Kongo had been in friendly contact with Christianity for more than one hundred years and Mwene Mutapa, the king of Zimbabwe, had just accepted the faith. There was also a Christian king in Warri and Mombasa, while there were mixed Portuguese- African churches on the islands of Cape Verde and Sao Tome, and in such places as Elmina, Luanda and Mozambique. Unfortunately, this promising situation was not to last for too long.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE 3.2

Describe the history of Christian presence in Africa

4.0 CONCLUSION

The history of the first fifteen hundred years of Christianity in Africa is limited to the countries north of the Sahara and the African horn: North Africa, Egypt, Nubia and Ethiopia. During the first six centuries, Egypt and North Africa formed one great communion with the other countries around the Mediterranean Sea: a commonwealth of nations bound together by the Roman Empire and still more deeply by the Christian faith. For a long time the two regions held a leading position in the universal church: Egypt in the Greek- speaking eastern part, North Africa in the Latin- speaking western part. Nubia and Ethiopia, deeper in the African heartlands, received missionaries through Egypt and were dependent on the Coptic Patriarch of Alexandria, whom they defended with the power of their arms in times of danger. Modern Egyptian Christians are proud to trace back the origin of the faith to the very origins of Christianity itself. In Cairo they venerate a church built over the place where the Holy Family supposedly dwelt during its sojourn in Egypt; persecuted in his own fatherland, Christ sought the hospitality of the Egyptians.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

The spread of Christianity throughout Egypt and Northern Africa, during the first five centuries was rapid and intense, despite the prevalence of false teachings, persecutions and martyrdom. Some religious scholars believe that Christianity was introduced to Africans by way of the Egyptian city of Alexandria. Reportedly, the city boasted a very large Jewish community, which was located in close proximity to Jerusalem. It is believed that African Jews in Alexandria were converted from Judaism to Christianity following a Jewish revolt in A.D. 115 that all but extinguished Judaism from the region.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

It is hoped that by the end of this unit, you should be able to;

- Give reasons why Africans initially rejected Christianity
- Discuss the spread of Christianity in Western, Eastern and southern Africa
- Explain the reasons for the rise of the Independent religious movements in Africa

3.1 HINDRANCES TO THE SPREAD OF CHRISTIANITY IN AFRICA

Despite the early introduction of Christianity in Ethiopia and North Africa, the religion did not penetrate sub-Saharan Africa for several hundred years. Christianity reached those regions by way of Europe during the great age of exploration. The Portuguese arrived in the kingdom of Kongo in 1483. Eight years later the king of Kongo was baptized under the name of João I, in honor of the Portuguese king João II.

As Europeans established outposts on the coast of Africa in the 1400s and 1500s, they brought along missionaries, who settled among indigenous* populations. At first, the introduction of Christianity was limited to Africans in coastal areas. With a few exceptions, missionaries did not carry Christianity into the interior of the continent until the 1800s. Europeans considered converting Africans to Christianity to be part of the process of colonization. As a result, their exploitation of Africa's wealth was accompanied by missionary activity. However, the primary interest of most of the conquerors and traders who journeyed to Africa was to enrich them. This goal often involved enslaving and even killing local populations. Although Christian missionaries had come to Africa to save souls, they were often associated with the greed of their fellow Europeans. For this reason, many Africans resisted the missionaries and their message.

After a while, instead of trying to impose Christianity on the Africans, Europeans began to look for ways to use local institutions to gain converts. Missionaries attempted to win over rulers and then use their authority to spread Christianity among the people. The long-term success of efforts to convert Africans to Christianity often depended on local political developments. The Christian nature of African kingdoms could prove short-lived if the ruling group was overthrown or challenged by a group opposed to Christianity. Attempts to spread the faith by reaching out to ordinary Africans did not occur for many years.

The Protestant outcry against the slave trade in the late 1700s and early 1800s marked a turning point for African Christianity. Significantly, the first Protestant missionaries to arrive in West Africa were former slaves who had supported the British in the American Revolutionary War. These black preachers and their successors transformed the face of African Christianity.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE 3.1

3.2 THE SPREAD OF CHRISTIANITY IN WESTERN AFRICA

In 1787, four hundred eleven freed blacks left London to found a community called Freetown in what is now Sierra Leone. It became a haven for freed slaves and an outpost for the spread of the gospel. Like the Puritans who settled New England, these early settlers burned with religious zeal. Freetown became a Christian commonwealth that inspired similar Christian communities farther down the coast in the Nigerian towns of Abeokuta and Badagry. “Recaptives” (slaves liberated by the British Navy) added to the population of Freetown. Many converted to the Christian faith and found an opportunity for training at Freetown’s Fourah Bay College, established in 1827.

One of the most outstanding graduates was a young receptive named Samuel Ajayi Crowther. Crowther was ordained in 1843, and in 1864 became Africa’s first Anglican bishop. The Church Missionary Society (CMS) recognized in Crowther the leader they needed to further the spread of Christianity in Africa. Under Henry Venn, an aggressive program of Africanization was adopted that called for the urgent building of self-supporting, self-propagating, and self-governing local churches. Crowther was asked to implement this strategy in the Nigerian interior. Through the failure of some of the members of his team and through the hostility of white missionaries opposed to Venn’s policies, Crowther was forced to resign. This led to a number of African-initiated churches. In addition to Nigeria, work went on in Liberia, Ghana, Cameroon, Gabon, Senegal, and Zaire, which was the main arena for Catholic missions.

Although not formally authorized as Protestant ministers, some of these former slaves became enthusiastic leaders of the effort to convert indigenous Africans to Christianity. In preaching to Africans, they saw much common ground between the lessons found in the Bible and traditional African beliefs and values. This link between the Christian message and African culture was an important factor in the spread of Christianity across the continent in the 1800s and 1900s.

3.3 THE SPREAD OF CHRISTIANITY IN SOUTHERN AFRICA

While West Africa was evangelized by Africans returning to their mother- land, South Africa from the very earliest days of Christianity was dominated by the white expatriate. Despite the common denominator of white domination, there was little unity in South African Christianity, which saw three distinct and mutually hostile expressions of Christianity emerge in the nineteenth century.

The first expression was that of Afrikaner Christianity and the Dutch Reformed Church. After England gained control of South Africa in 1815, conflicts between Boer families and English administrators multiplied, which led to mass migrations of Afrikaner families to north eastern regions of South Africa. [“Afrikaner” and “Boer” are names applied to the descendants of Dutch immigrants to South Africa.] One small party of “voortrekkers” encountered an army of Zulu warriors. Their surprising victory at the battle of Blood River in 1833 coupled with the tradition that trekkers had made a special covenant with God prior to the battle fueled the belief that Afrikaner Christians were an elect nation endowed by God with both a right to rule the land and a right to resist the non-elect. This religious tradition became a political and cultural force that found expression in the formation of the Afrikaner Nationalist Party.

The abolition of slavery by the British government in 1836 exacerbated deep resentments harbored by the Afrikaners. Outrage that indigenous people were “being placed on equal footing with Christians, contrary to the laws of God, and the natural distinctions of race and colour, led many Afrikaners to migrate out of British-controlled territory in what they compared to the biblical exodus. This separatist mindset eventually resulted in the policies of racial segregation and white domination known as apartheid.

A second expression of South African church life in the nineteenth century was that of 'missionary Christianity, which made major inroads into the Xhosa community and produce believers such as hymn writer Ntsikana and the African Presbyterian leader Tiyo Soga. Such leaders encouraged the missionary- dominated churches to engage in programs of training, including Lovedale College and Fort Hare University. David Livingstone's fame exceeded that of all other nineteenth century missionaries despite his failure as an evangelist (he saw only one convert, who eventually fell away). His achievements as an explorer, anti-slavery crusader, and mission's promoter establish his place in history.

Though missionary Christianity tended to emphasize inward piety and broadly evangelical theology that stood in contrast with the more reformed Afrikaners by the late nineteenth century, attempts were made to bridge the gap. Most successful was Andrew Murray, Jr., moderator of the Dutch Reformed Church and champion of both evangelical piety and missions. His emphasis on "absolute surrender" and the formation of new agencies such as the South Africa General Mission (now African Evangelical Fellowship) acted as a corrective to the Afrikaner Christianity.

A third expression of South African Christianity was that of the social gospel championed by people like the Anglican bishop John Colenso and John Jabavu. The emphasis on this form of Christianity was upon economic and political justice. Colenso opposed the Afrikaner and English messianic nationalism which he saw as the root of injustice in South Africa. His clash with Bishop Robert Gray of Cape Town ended with the formation of an independent Anglican communion in South Africa. Like Colenso, John Jabavu regarded politics as an appropriate arena for Christian involvement. A tireless campaigner for African rights, he founded his own independent newspaper. This third expression would become a major force in the years following South Africa's Sharpsville Massacre of 1960.

Despite the fragmented witness to the kingdom of God provided by South African Christianity, this region entered the twentieth century as one of the most Christianized regions in all of Africa. Yet, white denomination of the churches would eventually spawn a vigorous movement of "Ethiopianism"—separatist churches that demanded respect from the Westerner and a greater share of church leadership.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE 3.3

3.4 THE SPREAD OF CHRISTIANITY IN EASTERN AFRICA

By the 300s, Christianity had spread to Ethiopia and Eritrea, centred on the city of Aksum. Most of the region is still Christian today. Beginning in the 500s, Christian kingdoms also flourished on the upper Nile River in Nubia (in what is now Sudan). The nineteenth century witnessed the reintroduction of Christianity into the former Nubia (Sudan) and Mombasa (Kenya). Ethiopian Christianity was also revitalized. Additionally, the lands of Tanzania and Uganda saw the initial introduction of this ancient African faith among their own people.

3.4.1 ETHIOPIA AND SUDAN

In 1830, the CMS arrived in Ethiopia. Originally working with the Coptic Church, Protestant missionaries such as J. Ludwig Krapf clashed with Coptic authorities, leading to expulsion in 1843. Under Emperor Menelik II, Ethiopian Christianity experienced a new surge of life and entered the twentieth century carefully guarding its dearly won political and religious independence. In Sudan, Catholic work under the leadership of the Verona Fathers was swept away by the Islamic Mahdist movement.

3.4.2 KENYA.

KRAPF began work in Kenya in 1844 after his expulsion from Ethiopia. He and his colleague Johann Rebmann envisioned a chain of mission stations across the continent, linking up with Freetown in West Africa. Krapf's vision was to guide numerous mission agencies for the next century. Though he attempted to establish the eastern link of his chain at Rabai Mpyia, it was the later formation of Freetown (Kenya) in 1874 as a refuge for runaway slaves that gave Christianity its firmest foothold in British East Africa. Outstanding Christian leaders came from the community at Freetown, including David Koi, Kenya's first protestant martyr.

These missionary efforts on the coast were soon augmented by a new thrust inland. James Stewart, a Presbyterian missionary at Lovedale College, was recruited by Livingstone to establish an industrial mission in the Kenya interior in 1891. The CMS began work among Kikuyu of Kenya's central highlands in 1901. Peter Cameron Scott and his newly founded Africa Inland Mission (AIM) began churches among the Kamba people in 1895. The Holy Ghost Fathers began work in Nairobi in 1899.

3.4.3 TANZANIA.

The Catholic missionary efforts centered around the formation of a "Christian Village" at Begamoyo (1868), where three hundred freed slaves found a place of refuge. Protestant work was conducted by the Universities Mission to Central Africa (UMCA), who were vigorous in their opposition to the Arab slave trade that was decimating the inland people of Africa's Great Lake region, where London Missionary Society (LMS) and CMS had established a presence. Through the intervention of Germany, the Arab slave trade was broken and a number of German mission agencies introduced Lutheranism.

3.4.4 UGANDA.

The response to the gospel in Uganda was more dramatic than in any other part of East Africa. Christianity was introduced by the CMS in 1877 and flourished under the zealous leadership of Alexander Mackay. European priests introduced Catholicism in 1879. Despite the indifference of King Mutesa I and the violent hostility of his son Mwanga, Protestant and Catholic Christianity eventually produced a religious revolution in Uganda that spilled beyond the borders of the kingdom of Buganda into the smaller kingdoms that make up the modern day nation of Uganda.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE 3.4

Discuss the role of CMS in the spread of Christianity in East Africa

3.5 INDEPENDENT RELIGIOUS MOVEMENTS

The birth of the African initiated Church movement was one of the reactions to the missionary factor. The independent churches that were founded tended to fall into distinct groupings. Some were primarily concerned with African leadership and only secondarily concerned with changing missionary theology and worship, a second grouping emphasized healing and the supernatural. Armed with scripture in their own languages, they struck out on their own. The preaching of Liberia's William Wade Harris in West Africa claimed over one hundred thousand adherent. Others like Simon Kimbangu of Zaire catalyzed separation from missionary churches into new denominations. In some cases, these "prophet churches" moved clearly outside the bounds of orthodoxy. Such was the case with Isaiah Shembe and his church of the Nazarites in South Africa. After his death in 1935, his followers claimed that he had risen from the dead and was in fact the true Christ for Africa. A third category covers movements of revival within established denominations; the passion of these was the discovery of a vital Christianity to replace a numbing nominalism in the church. The outstanding example is the East Africa Revival that swept much of East Africa from 1930 onward.

SELF ASSESMENT EXERCISE

Explain the various groups among the Independent Religious movements in Africa.

4.0 CONCLUSION

The Protestant evangelists who founded missionary movements in Africa around 1800 stressed the important contributions that indigenous Africans could make to missionary activity. In 1861 a missionary named Henry Venn took the bold step of transferring nine churches in Sierra Leone to local control. He later named Samuel Ajayi Crowther, a former slave who had come to Freetown in 1822, as the first African bishop. From this point on, black preachers played a leading role in spreading Christianity throughout the continent. They used their familiarity with the people and their culture to relate the Christian message in a uniquely African context, one that combined elements of European Christianity with African traditions.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

Samuel Ajayi Crowther was probably the most widely known African Christian of the nineteenth century. His life spanned the greater part of it; he was born in its first decade and died in the last. He lived through a transformation of relations between Africa and the rest of the world and a parallel transformation in the Christian situation in Africa. By the time of his death the bright confidence in an African church led by Africans, a reality that he seemed to embody in himself had dimmed. Today things look very different. It seems a good time to consider the legacy of Crowther.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 EARLY LIFE

The story begins with the birth of a boy called Ajayi in the town of Osogun in Yorubaland in what is now Western Nigeria, in or about the year 1807. In later years, the story was told that a diviner had indicated that Ajayi was not to enter any of the cults of the orisa, the divinities of the Yoruba pantheon, because he was to be a servant of Olorun, the God of heaven. He grew up in dangerous times when the breakup of the old Yoruba empire of Oyo and the effect of the great Islamic jihads, which were establishing a new Fulani empire to the north, meant chaos for the Yoruba states. Warfare and raiding became endemic. Besides all the trauma of divided families and transplantation that African slavery could bring, the raids fed a still worse evil: the European traders at the coast. These maintained a trade in slaves, illegal but still richly profitable, across the Atlantic.

When Crowther was about thirteen, Osogun was raided, apparently by a combination of Fulani and Oyo Muslims. Crowther twice recorded his memories of the event, vividly recalling the desolation of burning houses, the horror of capture and roping by the neck, the slaughter of those unfit to travel, the distress of being torn from relatives. Ajayi changed hands six times, before being sold to Portuguese traders for the transatlantic market.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE 3.1

3.2 AJAYI CROWTHER'S ENCOUNTER WITH CHRISTIANITY

The colony of Sierra Leone had been founded by a coalition of anti-slavery interests, mostly evangelical Christian in inspiration and belonging to the circle associated with William Wilberforce and the "Clapham Sect." It was intended from the beginning as a Christian settlement, free from slavery and the slave trade. The first permanent element in the population was a group of former slaves from the New World. Following the abolition of the slave trade by the British Parliament in 1807 and the subsequent treaties with other nations to outlaw the traffic, Sierra Leone achieved a new importance. It was a base for the naval squadron that searched vessels to find if they were carrying slaves. It was also the place where slaves were brought if any were found aboard. The Portuguese ship on which Ajayi was taken as a slave was intercepted by the British naval squadron in April 1822, and he, like thousands of other uprooted, disorientated people from inland Africa, was put ashore in Sierra Leone.

By this time, Sierra Leone was becoming a Christian community. It was one of the few early successes of the missionary movement, though the Christian public at large was probably less conscious of the success than of the appalling mortality of missionaries in what became known as the White Man's Grave. To all appearances the whole way of life of Sierra Leone clothing, buildings, language, education, religion, even names closely followed Western models. These were people of diverse origins whose cohesion and original identity were now beyond recall. They accepted the combination of Christian faith and Western lifestyle that Sierra Leone offered, a combination already represented in the oldest inhabitants of the colony, the settled slaves from the New World.

Such was the setting in which young Ajayi now found himself. We know little of his early years there. Later he wrote that "about the third year of my liberation from the slavery of man, I was convinced of another worse state of slavery, namely, that of sin and Satan. It pleased the Lord to open my heart; I was admitted into the visible Church of Christ here on earth as a soldier to fight manfully under his banner against our spiritual enemies". He was baptized by the Reverend John Raban, of the (Anglican) Church Missionary Society, taking the name Samuel Crowther, after a member of that society's home committee. Mr. Crowther was an eminent clergyman; his young namesake was to make the name far more celebrated.

Crowther had spent those early years in Sierra Leone at school, getting an English education, adding carpentry to his traditional weaving and agricultural skills. In 1827 the Church Missionary Society decided, for the sake of Sierra Leone's future Christian leadership, to provide education to a higher level than the colony's modest schools had given. The resultant "Christian Institution" developed as Fourah Bay College, which eventually offered the first university education in tropical Africa. Crowther was one of its first students.

3.2.1 Preparation for Missionary work

This period marked the beginning of the work that was to form one of the most abiding parts of Crowther's legacy. He continued to have contact with Raban, who had baptized him; and Raban was one of the few missionaries in Sierra Leone to take African languages seriously. To many of his colleagues the priority was to teach English, which would render the African languages unnecessary. Raban realized that such policy was a dead end; he also realized that Yoruba, Crowther's mother tongue, was a major language. (Yoruba had not been prominent in the early years of Sierra Leone, but the political circumstances that had led to young Ajayi's captivity were to bring many other Yoruba to the colony.) Crowther became an informant for Raban, who between 1828 and 1830 published three little books about Yoruba; and almost certainly he also assisted another pioneer African linguist, the Quaker educationist Hannah Kilham.

Crowther was appointed a schoolmaster of the mission, serving in the new villages created to receive "liberated Africans" from the slave ships. A schoolmaster was an evangelist; in Sierra Leone church and school were inseparable. He was a vigorous young man who at least at first was highly confrontational in his encounters with representatives of Islam and the old religions in Africa. In later life he valued the lessons of this apprenticeship - the futility of abuse, the need to build personal relationships, and the ability to listen patiently. Crowther began study of the Temne language, which suggests a missionary vision toward the hinterland of Sierra Leone. But he also worked systematically at his own language, as far as the equipment to hand allowed.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Highlight the major events that influenced Bishop Ajayi Crowther's missionary journey

3.3 AJAYI CROWTHER'S CONTRIBUTION TO PIONEERING CHRISTIANITY IN AFRICA

Two developments now opened a new chapter for Crowther and for Sierra Leone Christianity. One was a new link with Yorubaland. Enterprising liberated Africans, banding together and buying confiscated slave ships, began trading far afield from Freetown. Some of Yoruba origin found their way back to their homeland. They settled there, but kept the Sierra Leone connections and the ways of life of Christian Freetown.

The second development was the Niger Expedition of 1841, the brief flowering of the humanitarian vision for Africa of Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton. This investigative mission, intended to prepare the way for an alliance of "Christianity, commerce and civilization" that would destroy the slave trade and bring peace and prosperity to the Niger, relied heavily on Sierra Leone for interpreters and other helpers. The missionary society representatives also came from Sierra Leone. One was J. F. Schön, a German missionary who had striven with languages of the Niger, learning from liberated Africans in Sierra Leone. The other was Crowther.

Crowther's services to the disaster-stricken expedition were invaluable. Schön cited them as evidence of his thesis that the key to the evangelization of inland Africa lay in Sierra Leone. Sierra Leone had Christians such as Crowther to form the task force; it had among the liberated Africans brought there from the slave ships a vast language laboratory for the study of all the languages of West Africa, as well as a source of native speakers as missionaries; and in the institution at Fourah Bay it had a base for study and training.

The Niger Expedition had shown Crowther's qualities, and he was brought to England for study and ordination. The latter was of exceptional significance. Anglican ordination could be received only from a bishop, and there was no bishop nearer than London. Here then, in 1843, began Sierra Leone's indigenous ministry. Here, too, began Crowther's literary career, with the publication of Yoruba Vocabulary, including an account of grammatical structure, surely the first such work by a native speaker of an African language.

3.3.1 The Yoruba Mission

Meanwhile, the new connection between Sierra Leone and Yorubaland had convinced the CMS of the timeliness of a mission to the Yoruba. There had been no opportunity to train that African mission force foreseen by Schön and Crowther in their report on the Niger Expedition, but at least in Crowther there was one ordained Yoruba missionary available. Thus, after an initial reconnaissance by Henry Townsend, an English missionary from Sierra Leone, a mission party went to Abeokuta, the state of the Egba section of the Yoruba people. It was headed by Townsend, Crowther, and a German missionary, C. A. Gollmer, with a large group of Sierra Leoneans from the liberated Yoruba community. These included carpenters and builders who were also teachers and catechists. The mission intended to demonstrate a whole new way of life, of which the church and the school and the well-built house were all a part. They were establishing Sierra Leone in Yorubaland. The Sierra Leone trader-immigrants, the people who had first brought Abeokuta to the attention of the mission, became the nucleus of the new Christian community.

The CMS Yoruba mission is a story in itself. How the mission, working on Buxton's principles, introduced the growing and processing of cotton and arranged for its export, thereby keeping Abeokuta out of the slave economy; how the missionaries identified with Abeokuta under invasion and reaped their reward afterward; how the CMS mobilized Christian opinion to influence the British government on behalf of Abeokuta; and the toils into which the mission fell amid inter-Yoruba and colonial conflicts, have been well told elsewhere. Crowther came to London in 1851 to present the cause of Abeokuta. He saw government ministers; he had an interview with the Queen and Prince Albert; he spoke at meetings all over the country, invariably to great effect. This grave, eloquent, well-informed black clergyman was the most impressive tribute to the effect of the missionary movement that most British people had seen; and Henry Venn, the CMS secretary who organized the visit, believed that it was Crowther who finally moved the government to action.

But the missionaries' day-to-day activities lay in commending the Gospel and nourishing the infant church. There was a particularly moving incident for Crowther, when he was reunited with the mother and sister from whom he had been separated when the raiders took them more than twenty years earlier. They were among the first in Abeokuta to be baptized.

In Sierra Leone the church had used English in its worship. The new mission worked in Yoruba, with the advantage of native speakers in Crowther and his family and in most of the auxiliaries, and with Crowther's book to assist the Europeans. Townsend, an excellent practical linguist, even edited a Yoruba newspaper. But the most demanding activity was Bible translation. The significance of the Yoruba version has not always been observed. It was not the first translation into an African language; but, insofar as Crowther was the leading influence in its production, it was the first by a native speaker. Early missionary translations naturally relied heavily on native speakers as informants and guides; but in no earlier case was a native speaker able to judge and act on an equal footing with the European.

Crowther insisted that the translation should indicate tone -- a new departure. In vocabulary and style he sought to get behind colloquial speech by listening to the elders, by noting significant words that emerged in his discussions with Muslims or specialists in the old religion. Over the years, wherever he was, he noted words, proverbs, forms of speech. One of his hardest blows was the loss of the notes of eleven years of such observations, and some manuscript translations, when his house burned down in 1862.

Written Yoruba was the product of missionary committee work, Crowther interacting with his European colleagues on matters of orthography. Henry Venn engaged the best linguistic expertise available in Europe - not only Schön and the society's regular linguistic adviser, Professor Samuel Lee of Cambridge, but the great German philologist Lepsius. The outcome may be seen in the durability of the Yoruba version of the Scriptures to which Crowther was the chief contributor and in the vigorous vernacular literature in Yoruba that has grown up.

One of these is the continued contribution to language study and translation. Crowther himself wrote the first book on Igbo. He begged Schön, now serving an English parish, to complete his Hausa dictionary. He sent one of his missionaries to study Hausa with Schön. Most of his Sierra Leone staff, unlike people of his own generation, were not native speakers of the languages of the areas they served. The great Sierra Leone language laboratory was closing down; English and the common language, Krio, took over from the languages of the liberated. Add to this the limited education of many Niger missionaries, and their record of translation and publication is remarkable.

3.3.2 New Niger Expeditions and a Mission to the Niger

In 1854 the merchant McGregor Laird sponsored a new Niger expedition, on principles similar to the first, but with a happier outcome. The CMS sent Crowther on this expedition. It revived the vision he had seen in 1841 -- a chain of missionary operations hundreds of miles along the Niger, into the heart of the continent. He urged a beginning at Onitsha, in Igboland. The opportunity was not long in coming. In 1857, he and J. C. Taylor, a Sierra Leonean clergyman of liberated Igbo parentage, joined Laird's next expedition to the Niger. Taylor opened the Igbo mission at Onitsha; Crowther went upriver. Shipwrecked, and stranded for months, he began to study the Nupe language and surveyed openings to the Nupe and Hausa peoples. The Niger Mission had begun.

Henry Venn soon made a formal structure for it. But it was a mission on a new principle. Crowther led a mission force consisting entirely of Africans. Sierra Leone, as he and Schön had foreseen so long ago, was now evangelizing inland Africa. For nearly half a century that tiny country sent a stream of missionaries, ordained and lay, to the Niger territories. The area was vast and diverse: Muslim emirates in the north, ocean-trading city-states in the Delta, the vast Igbo populations in between. It is cruel that the missionary contribution of Sierra Leone has been persistently overlooked, and even denied.

It is possible here to consider only three aspects of a remarkable story. Two have been somewhat neglected. The story of the later years of the Niger mission has often been told and variously interpreted. It still raises passions and causes bitterness. There is no need here to recount more than the essentials: that questions arose about the lives of some of the missionaries; that European missionaries were brought into the mission, and then took it over, brushing aside the old bishop (he was over eighty) and suspending or dismissing his staff.

There were some unexpected legacies even from the last sad days. One section of the Niger mission that in the Niger Delta, was financially self-supporting. Declining the European takeover, it long maintained a separate existence under Crowther's son, Archdeacon Dandeson Crowther, within the Anglican Communion but outside the CMS. It grew at a phenomenal rate, becoming so self-propagating that it ceased to be self-supporting.

3.3.3 The Engagement with Islam

Crowther's Niger Mission also represents the first sustained missionary engagement with African Islam in modern times. In the Upper Niger areas in Crowther's time, Islam, largely accepted by the chiefs, was working slowly through the population in coexistence with the old religion. From his early experiences in Sierra Leone, Crowther understood how Islamic practice could merge with traditional views of power. He found a demand for Arabic Bibles, but was cautious about supplying them unless he could be sure they would not be used for charms. His insight was justified later, when the young European missionaries who succeeded him wrote out passages of Scripture on request, pleased at such a means of Scripture distribution. They stirred up the anger of Muslim clerics -- not because they were circulating Christian Scriptures, but because they were giving them free, thus undercutting the trade in quranic charms.

In discussion with Muslims, Crowther sought common ground and found it at the nexus of Qur'an and Bible: Christ as the great prophet, his miraculous birth, Gabriel as the messenger of God. He enjoyed courteous and friendly relations with Muslim rulers, and his writings trace various discussions with rulers, courts, and clerics, recording the questions raised by Muslims, and his own answers, the latter as far as possible in the words of Scripture: "After many years' experience, I have found that the Bible, the sword of the Spirit, must fight its own battle, by the guidance of the Holy Spirit."

Christians should of course defend Trinitarian doctrine, but let them do so mindful of the horror-stricken cry of the Qur'an, "Is it possible that Thou dost teach that Thou and Thy Mother are two Gods?" In other words, Christians must show that the things that the Muslims fear as blasphemous are no part of Christian doctrine.

Crowther, though no great scholar or Arabist, developed an approach to Islam in its African setting that reflected the patience and the readiness to listen that marked his entire missionary method. Avoiding denunciation and allegations of false prophecy, it worked by acceptance of what the Qur'an says of Christ, and an effective knowledge of the Bible. Crowther looked to the future with hope; the average African Christian knew the Bible much better than the average African Muslim knew the Qur'an. And he pondered the fact that the Muslim rule of faith was expressed in Arabic, the Christian in Hausa, or Nupe or Yoruba. The result was different understandings of how the faith was to be applied in life.

3.3.4 The Indigenization of the Episcopate

The best-known aspect of Crowther's later career is also the most controversial: his representation of the indigenous church principle. We have seen that he was the first ordained minister of his church in his place. It was the policy of Henry Venn, then newly at the helm of the CMS, to strengthen the indigenous ministry. More and more Africans were ordained, some for the Yoruba mission. And Venn wanted well-educated, well-trained African clergy; such people as Crowther's son Dandeson (who became archdeacon) and his son-in-law T. B. Macaulay (who became principal of Lagos Grammar School) were better educated than many of the homespun English missionaries.

Venn sought self-governing, self-supporting, self-propagating churches with a fully indigenous pastorate. In Anglican terms, this meant indigenous bishops. The missionary role was a temporary one; once a church was established, the missionary should move on. The birth of the church brought the euthanasia of the mission. With the growth of the Yoruba church, Venn sought to get these principles applied in Yorubaland. Even the best European missionaries thought this impractical, the hobbyhorse of a doctrinaire home-based administrator.

As we have seen, Venn made a new sphere of leadership for Crowther, the outstanding indigenous minister in West Africa. But he went further, and in 1864 secured the consecration of Crowther as bishop of "the countries of Western Africa beyond the limits of the Queen's dominions," a title reflecting some constraints imposed by Crowther's European colleagues and the peculiarities of the relationship of the Church of England to the Crown. Crowther, a genuinely humble man, resisted; Venn would take no refusal.

In one sense, the new diocese represented the triumph of the three-self principle and the indigenization of the episcopate. But it reflected a compromise, rather than the full expression of those principles. It was, after all, essentially a mission, drawing most of its clergy not from natives of the soil but from Sierra Leone. Its ministry was "native" only in the sense of not being European. Three-self principles required it to be self-supporting; this meant meagre resources, missionaries who got no home leave, and the need to present education as a saleable product.

European thought about Africa had changed since the time of Buxton; the Western powers were now in Africa to govern. Missionary thought about Africa had changed since the days of Henry Venn; there were plenty of keen, young Englishmen to extend the mission and order the church; a self-governing church now seemed to matter much less. And evangelical religion had changed since Crowther's conversion; it had become more individualistic and more otherworldly. A young English missionary was distressed that the old bishop who preached so splendidly on the blood of Christ could urge on a chief the advantages of having a school and make no reference to the future life. This story illustrates in brief the two evangelical itineraries: the short route via Keswick, and the long one via the White Man's Grave, the Niger Expedition and the courts of Muslim rulers of the north.

Other voices called for direct schism; the refusal to appoint an African successor to Crowther, despite the manifest availability of outstanding African clergy, marks an important point in the history of African Independent churches. The treatment of Crowther, and still more the question of his successor, gave a focus for the incipient nationalist movement of which E. W. Blyden was the most eloquent spokesman. Crowther thus has his own modern place in the martyrology of African nationalism.

But the majority of Christians, including those natural successors of Crowther who were passed over or, worse, suffered denigration or abuse, took no such course. They simply waited. Crowther was the outstanding representative of a whole body of West African church leaders who came to the fore in the pre-Imperial age and were superseded in the Imperial. But the Imperial age it was to be only an episode. The legacy of Samuel Ajayi Crowther, the humble, devout exponent of a Christian faith that was essentially African and essentially missionary, has passed to the whole vast church of Africa and thus to the whole vast church of Christ.

Discuss Ajayi Crowther's contribution to pioneering Christianity in Africa

4.0 CONCLUSION

In 1891 Crowther, a desolate, broken man suffered a stroke; on the last day of the year, he died. A European bishop was appointed to succeed him. The self-governing church and the indigenization of the episcopate were abandoned. Contemporary mission accounts all praise Crowther's personal integrity, graciousness, and godliness. In the Yoruba mission, blessed with many strong, not to say prickly, personalities, his influence had been irenic. In Britain he was recognized as a cooperative and effective platform speaker. (A CMS official remembered Crowther's being called on to give a conference address on "Mission and Women" and holding his audience spellbound.) Yet the same sources not only declared Crowther "a weak bishop" but drew the moral that "the African race" lacked the capacity to rule.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

The Baptist Mission first came to Nigeria in 1850 when Rev. Thomas J. Bowen, the pioneer American Baptist missionary (First Baptist Church, Lagos was originally known as American Baptist Church) arrived in Nigeria. The efforts of this singular man opened up Nigeria for other American Baptists who came after him. From 1855 when Bowen made his first convert (according to entries in his diary) he began to nurse the hope of starting a native African pastorate to minister to Africans. Not long afterwards God provided a man who would become the first Nigerian to be ordained as a Baptist minister: Moses Ladejo Stone.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you should be able to:

- Highlight the importance of discipleship using the life of Stone Moses Ladejo
- Discuss Stone Ladejo's contribution to pioneering Christianity in Africa

- Enumerate the sufferings and heroic sacrifice of Stone Moses Ladejo

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 EARLY LIFE

Moses Ladejo was born around 1850 at Ogbomoso. In 1855 Rev. T. J. Howell was said to have converted a woman called Ofiki who was barren. Ofiki had adopted her brother-in-law's son, Ladejo. The woman became a firm believer in the Scriptures and followed the missionaries' teaching despite her husband's constant beatings. Though persecuted, she remained true to her new faith and providentially helped to preserve Ladejo's life. In March 1860, longstanding hostility led to war between Ibadan and Ijaye. The Alaafin of Oyo declared his support for Ibadan. The Alake of Abeokuta, fresh from a military success over his archenemies, the Dahomeans, supported Ijaye while the Ijebus followed the Egbas. Henry Townsend, a C.M.S. missionary in Abeokuta anxious to appear as the champion of the Egbas, threw his weight behind the Egbas.

The British officials were at first inclined to take Townsend's line of action, but when they realized that the war involved practically all Yorubaland and was likely to prove costly and protracted, they avoided any direct involvement. This left Ijaye open to a full Ibadan offensive which in March 1862 led to the subjugation of Ijaye and the departure of the missionaries for Abeokuta. During the Ibadan-Ijaye war, young Ladejo was taken for protection to the American Baptist mission house at Ogbomoso and handed over to Rev. W. H. Clarke. Later, he was taken to Ijaye where he stayed with Rev. Bowen for some time and when Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Stone arrived at Ijaye, Ladejo was taken into their custody and became a mission boy.

These missionaries stayed at Ijaye until the 1862 sack by Ibadan. As noted earlier the missionaries R. H. Stone, Vaughan and Russell (two Liberian carpenters who arrived with Sierra Leone immigrants) left Ijaye for Abeokuta and camped at the place later known as Ago Ijaye (Ijaye quarters). Some refugees and over a dozen children, among them Ladejo, followed the missionaries. These children were either orphans or had been given to the missionaries for safety reasons.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

What lessons can be learnt from Stone's humble background

3.2 Schooling and Ministry Apprenticeship

At Abeokuta a small school was started for the children and Ladejo was one of the first pupils enrolled. He was further apprenticed to Vaughan to learn carpentry, a skill in which he excelled. Rev. R. H. Stone said of him: He was one of the school children at Abeokuta when our station was destroyed there in 1867. When I began a station and school at Lagos in the year 1868, I found it convenient to take him into my household together with several other boys. In a few months he gave such evidence of genuine devotion that I baptized him. (...) I believe that he will become as great a blessing to Yoruba as Bishop Crowther, if he receives anything like the aid and encouragement that Crowther received.

In 1867, mission properties at Abeokuta were confiscated by the Egbas who had become hostile to the missionaries. The Baptist missionaries then left for Lagos. In 1868 another school was established. In 1869, before R. H. Stone left for America he baptized Ladejo. Doubtless, as a token of gratitude, this young African took the name of his missionary parent and became known as Moses Ladejo Stone. With the departure of R. H. Stone there were no American Baptist missionaries left in Nigeria. But M. L. Stone and Sarah Harden, wife of a Negro missionary and a liberated slave, R. M. Harden, carried on the school and church work until the arrival of Rev. W. J. David in 1875.

When W. J. David started his work, M. L. Stone was called from his job to serve as an interpreter and assistant to David, and because of his exceptional abilities, David began to give him lectures in theology. In 1876, David went to Ogbomoso and organized the church there. Two years later, when David went on furlough to America, he sent M. L. Stone, who had become indispensable to him, to pastor the church at Ogbomoso. Before Stone left for Ogbomoso David said of him, "I have lost my right arm." M. L. Stone arrived in Ogbomoso in the last two weeks of 1878.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Discuss the importance of Education in the life of Stone Ladejo

3.3 His Ministry, Formative Experience

Despite his being a "son of the soil," Moses did not escape severe persecution in those early days of missionary work in Nigeria. Writing from Ogbomoso in February 1879 to W. J. David he said: Since my arrival I have written four letters to you telling you how great were my troubles, pains and fears on my journey to this place. (...) I suffered twenty-one days of virtual imprisonment, and almost starvation in Oyo, I met with trouble from town to town. I was severely beaten and had wounds made in my flesh with the point of their knives, but I cannot tell of our troubles, pains and fear with pen and ink.

Stone's ministry was very successful and the church witnessed a spiritual and numerical growth. He later wrote to Rev. W. W. Colley asking if he could baptize converts since there were no ordained ministers around. The following year, 1879, David returned from America with about $2,500 and building materials with which the First Baptist Church in Lagos was built. It was completed and finally consecrated in 1887.

3.3.1 His Call and Ordination into the Ministry

In February 1880, Stone left Ogbomoso to go to Lagos for his ordination. The trip to Lagos was made through Ondo and Ilesa to escape the threat of robbers. He was accompanied by a small girl, Phoebe Adeniyi, who would later become the first president of the women's organization in Ogbomoso. It was most likely that the question of Stone's ordination had been discussed between the missionaries Colley and David and possibly with the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, because by the time Stone left Ogbomoso for Lagos arrangements for his ordination had been concluded.

3.3.2 Reasons for His Early Ordination

There are two possible reasons for the ordination of Stone in 1880 as the first Nigerian Baptist minister. First, M. L. Stone was in Ogbomoso and the missionaries were at Lagos. It has been acknowledged that Stone won many converts and so there was a need to baptize and confirm them as Baptist church members. The converts could not be brought to Lagos for this and the missionaries could not go to Ogbomoso for various reasons so it became expedient to ordain Stone. Second, denominational rivalry might have made his ordination urgent. Among the Anglicans, there had been ordained African priests and a bishop. Thus to bring the Baptist Mission up to the same level of honor with other missions, it became necessary to ordain the leading native pastor. It will be recalled that Rev. R. H. Stone had once prayed that he would become as great a blessing to Yoruba as Bishop Crowther.

On the 22nd of February 1880, Moses Ladejo Stone was ordained into full Gospel ministry in the First Baptist Church, Lagos (originally known as American Baptist Church) by Reverends W. J. David and W. W. Colley. The next day he baptized two converts who had accompanied him from the interior.

3.3.3 His Initial Reluctance to Serve as a Full-time Minister

L. M. Duval in his book Baptist Missions in Nigeria wrote that after his ordination Stone reluctantly returned to Ogbomoso though it was his wish to remain near the coast with the missionaries so as to get the opportunity to further pursue his studies. If this account is true, Stone probably did not seriously consider the implications of his ordination especially if he placed greater premium on his studies than on his pastoral responsibilities. By 1881, Stone had baptized twenty more converts.

Stone was called to Lagos in 1884 to become a teacher at the Elementary School of Baptist Academy and an assistant pastor at First Baptist Church, Lagos. He was succeeded in Ogbomoso by Rev. L. O. Fadipe. In 1888, when Stone was still assistant pastor of First Baptist Church, Lagos, an incident occurred which was to have tremendous impact on the work of missionaries in Nigeria.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Describe challenges and misunderstandings faced by Stone Moses Ladejo

3.4 The Nationalist Revolution

The spirit of nationalism was being awakened throughout Africa and educated Africans were beginning to express the desire for self-determination. Those of them who had taken their white masters' names changed them. There was a drive to return to African names. Thus, David Brown Vincent became Mojola Agbebi, Lewis Stone became Lewis Fadipe and Lajide Mills became Lajide Tubi. These Africans felt that authentic African names must reappear from beneath that cultural imperialism of the west with which Christianity has undoubtedly been most closely linked. At this time, a misunderstanding between Stone and David provided an opportunity for a manifestation of this inner desire.

3.4.1 Stone Humiliated

The misunderstanding arose over M. L. Stone's salary. He was receiving twenty-five shillings which was being paid jointly by the Foreign Mission Board and the church in Lagos. Having lived in hardship for a long time and not being able to bear it any longer, Stone asked for a salary increase of five shillings which David flatly turned down. Consequently, Stone, with the help of his houseboy, took to chopping firewood from Mekume and Iru on the road to Victoria Beach. One account states that it was David himself who suggested it to Stone, but there is no evidence to support this claim. It certainly could not be true since his dismissal by David was on account of his alleged engagement in trading. Before this problem however, it has been said that David envied Stone's eloquence in preaching.

Stone's only problem was his poor knowledge of the English language. His desire to go to America to further his education was frustrated by David who refused to grant him the required permission to go. Thus, there was already tension in their relationship before Stone started his firewood business. Then, one Sunday at church, the congregation discovered that their native pastor had been dismissed. A delegation led by J. C. Vaughan met David to ask for an explanation, but David rebuffed them claiming that he had the authority to dismiss Stone. At the church business meeting the matter was retabled but David was adamant. One elder was said to have threatened to pull out of the church, if David would not cooperate.

3.4.2 First Baptist Church Divided

By the Sunday after the incident, Stone's sympathizers had indeed pulled out of the church without referring the matter to the home mission in America. The breakaway group held its first service under a temporary shed in Rev. Ladejo Stone's yard at Wesley Street, Lagos. Before the end of the week, J. C. Vaughan had put up a bamboo shed in Rev. Stone's yard and it became their place of worship for many years before another site was acquired. It is significant to note that the rift occurred shortly after the dedication of the First Baptist Church building, the construction towards which both Stone and David had worked very hard. One would have thought that it was a time to forget all differences and worship together. About two hundred members pulled out, leaving only twenty-four or twenty-five worshippers in the First Baptist Church, Lagos.

It was strongly believed that the group was going to establish another denomination. But this move was stopped by J. C. Vaughan who strongly advised the congregation not to leave the Baptist fold. This group later formed the Ebenezer Baptist Church. Dr. Mojola Agbebi played a key role in preventing the Ebenezer Baptist Church from becoming a syncretistic sect. S. M. Harden, a witness and party to the schism said: Dark days were in store for us, of which we had no foreboding. They came in the shape of differences between Rev. W. J. David and our native pastor, the Rev. M. L. Stone. Some of us,--by far the greatest majority of us,--sided with Mr. Stone, whom we felt had been unfairly treated.

The result was a division in the church: Mr. Stone was dismissed, Dr. Agbebi (then Mr. David Vincent, a teacher in the elementary school) and the rest of us resigned our respective posts, and severed our connection with the church, and with a large number of adherents, proceeded to form what is now known as Ebenezer Baptist Church. Another eyewitness remarked: David actually had no authority as he arrogantly claimed either to dismiss or accept the resignation of Stone without any reference to the congregation. But American missionaries were a long way from Nigeria. Like Rev. J. B. Wood and some other Anglican missionaries who humiliated Bishop Ajayi Crowther about that same time, they were used to taking the law into their own hands. David had spent thirteen years in Lagos and was an inspiring and enthusiastic leader.

It was therefore easy for him to assume that his word was law. He had secured large sums of money for the mission from the United States of America by displaying a young Yoruba man in Egungun and Oro Costumes. He must have felt that he who pays the piper must invariably dictate the tune. This schism gradually spread to other denominations. The Baptist secessionists continued to be loyal to their doctrines and were eventually reunited with the Baptist convention organized some years later.

The movement for self-determination eventually spread to Ogbomoso, and so the Baptist Mission decided to locate the Smiths there, ostensibly to minimize the effects of the Lagos schism. G. W. Sadler later wrote: "Our work in Ogbomoso was so disrupted by the spirit of self-determination that the mission deemed it advisable for Mr. and Mrs. Smith to establish them in that inferior city." The posting of the Smiths to Ogbomoso caused another revolt in the church there. Rev. (then Mr.) Lewis Fadipe pastor of the church took the equivalent of $7.00 from the church's coffer to pay the carriers who helped the Smiths, but some church members led by Daddy Barika demanded to know the right the pastor had to do so. They consequently withdrew from the church to form another one. They however returned much later to fellowship with the mother church.

When the two hundred members withdrew from the First Baptist Church, Lagos, David and the missionaries made very frantic but futile efforts to get Stone isolated. They called on the congregation to exclude him from the pulpit and accused him of persistent untruthfulness. Stone behaved with dignity. He questioned the missionaries' right to withdraw fellowship. He pointed out that the charge of untruthfulness had never been mentioned and reiterated the right, according to Baptist principles, to set up an independent church. Stone officially became the pastor of the seceding members.

3.4.3 The Effect of the Division and the Return to the Mother Church

The effects of the schism in Lagos were numerous. First, it caused a rapid expansion of Baptist Mission work in Nigeria. The Baptists broke from their restrictions in the American Baptist Church (First Baptist Church, Lagos) to found other churches of the Ebenezer group in Lagos and other towns. S. M. Harden wrote: "Looking back now after the lapse of years, we can trace God's purpose, for out of seeming evil, good has come. (...) Instead of there being three Baptist Churches in Lagos, there might have been only one."

M. L. Duval who arrived Nigeria in 1901 and got the news of the schism from an eye witness said: "But that which in the eyes of man is a calamity is often used of God for the expansion of His Kingdom, and thus it proved in this case." The schism was a test of the Baptist faith brought to Nigeria by America missionaries and nurtured by God to grow in the hearts of men, to see whether the doctrines of this democratic church could really withstand the test of time and faith. Secondly, the schism was also an opportunity for the Africans to demonstrate their leadership and organizational abilities. The breakaway party first chose Rev. M. L. Stone as their pastor and immediately formed a new church which later superseded the old church in numerical strength.

Rev. M. L. Stone was able to fully use his ministerial talents following the schism. After he was reconciled to the missionaries and called back to the First Baptist Church, Lagos, his gift for preaching sound and inspiring sermons and his inexhaustible store of humor helped the church to grow. Louis M. Duval saw a demonstration of this on the day he arrived. It was a Sunday evening, and he and Mr. Lumbley who had come from Abeokuta to meet him saw a great congregation listening to Stone's sermon in the First Baptist Church. The Lagos Standard newspaper of February 17, 1901 reported:

The popularity of Rev. M. L. Stone is well-known, (and) so great as to attract a large congregation to his ministrations, so that the First Baptist Church, Broad Street, notwithstanding that its location is not in the center of the population, is invariably the most crowded place of worship in town every Sunday evening. Rev. W. J. David's Frustration Rev. W. J. David did not stay long in Nigeria after the schism though he was given a vote of confidence by the Foreign Mission Board. It was likely that he was not happy at the turn of events. He went on furlough that same year, 1888, and did not come back, though he lived till 1894. His successor was C. C. Newton who arrived Nigeria in 1889. Did the Foreign Mission Board diplomatically recall David? Did he leave out of frustration? We cannot really say. All we know is that when he left, he was immediately replaced,--a move which aroused some suspicion.

C. C. Newton obviously made great efforts to reconcile the breakaway group (The Ebenezer Baptist Church) with the mother church.

3.4.4 Reunification with the Mother Church

The Ebenezer Church had insisted that its members would only accept reconciliation on certain conditions:

- (a) That all the members would be received back as a body.
- (b) That Stone, Harden and Vincent would be reinstated.
- (c) That the church building would be regarded as the property of the church.
- (d) That the church would be properly constituted as independent of the mission.

Newton, while he was not opposed to these conditions tried to insist on a confession of guilt by the schismatics but this was not acceptable to the Ebenezer Church. However, six years later, in 1894 the breach between Stone and the Baptist mission was healed and Stone was restored to full fellowship. He was asked to pastor his old church, First Baptist Church, Lagos. From 1888 when the secession took place, Moses Ladejo Stone served for a few years at Ebenezer Baptist Church, Lagos before moving to Abeokuta at the request of W. T. Lumbley to take charge of the church there. It was not unlikely that Stone in his last days with Ebenezer Church did not take the church into confidence with regard to his restoration because there is nothing on record to the effect that Stone informed the church that he was going back to the mission when he did.

Before the crisis was finally resolved, Stone took a leave of three months and went to Ogbomoso and Mr. J. B. Clay took over the pastoral care of Ebenezer Baptist Church in his absence. The leave was later extended to six months, the last three months without salary. (Could it be that Stone had been placed on the payroll of the mission by that time?) He never returned to Ebenezer Baptist Church after that because he was completely reconciled with the missionaries, and in 1894 he accepted the call to minister at First Baptist Church, Lagos. It can therefore be said that Newton's effort yielded results. But if Stone had been reconciled with the missionaries what about the people who left with him? They refused to follow Stone back to the mission insisting that they did not leave First Baptist Church because of Stone. However, it was not long before the people were brought back to the mission. In 1914, Dr. Agbebi was elected first president of the Yoruba Baptist Association, and the healing of the division became a spiritual reality, although the administrative differences lingered on for many years.

3.5 Stone's Outstanding Achievements

Stone's return to First Baptist Church, Lagos, in 1894 was a most outstanding achievement. His subsequent nineteen years of pastoral activities at First Baptist Church (1894 - 1913) became a God-inspired manifestation of his many talents in ministry, preaching and human relations. Under Moses Ladejo Stone's influence and with God's blessings (I Cor. 3:6), First Baptist Church witnessed tremendous and phenomenal growth from 1894 onwards.

His preaching gift helped to draw a large congregation to First Baptist Church every Sunday. During Stone's pastoral work at First Baptist Church, I. O. Gilbert became a Baptist and later contributed immensely to Baptist work in Nigeria. Another notable man in his congregation was Thomas Falope who went back home to establish Otun Gbede Baptist Church in 1906. Rev. Ladejo Stone was present at the first Native Workers' conference held at Oyo in 1897 under the chairmanship of L. M. Duval and this was the nucleus of the Yoruba Baptist Association formed in 1914.

On March 28, 1906, M. L. Stone left Lagos for a visit to Ijebuland. There were three Baptist Churches in Ijebuland at that time located at Ogbogbo, Idesse, and Ilishan which was the most recent. He visited twenty-six villages, preached and baptized sixty-six converts. Among his achievements at First Baptist Church, Lagos is the production of the first Hymn Book in 1907, the addition of a sacristy to the church building, and the installation of electric lights in the church.

He continued his pastoral work at First Baptist Church, Lagos until late 1912 when due to ill health; he left Lagos for Ogbomosho where he died on April 30, 1913. He was a man who remained true to the Baptist Faith and whose singular achievements placed African ministers on the same level with the white missionaries in Africa.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Enumerate Stone Ladejo's contribution to pioneering Christianity in Africa

4.0 CONCLUSION

While serving as the pastor of First Baptist Church, Stone led the congregation to raise funds with which the church building was purchased from the mission. By 1900 the congregation could announce that it was self-supporting. At the time of his death in 1913 the membership of First Baptist Church had increased from fifty-two to two hundred and twenty-five, while contributions went from close to nothing to $1,200 and the sum of $1,300 was spent on the purchase of a pipe organ.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

In this unit we will be looking at the brief heroic sacrifice and suffering encountered by William Wade Harris, Agbebi Mojola (David Brown Vincent) and Shembe Isaiah Midliwamafa. These Africa leaders all believed in Christianity the African way, which made many western authors write negatively about them.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you should be able to”

- Discuss the contribution of William Wade Harris to the pioneering of Christianity in Africa
- Discuss the contribution of Agbebi Mojola to pioneering of Christianity in Africa

- Discuss the contribution of Shembe Isaiah Midliwamafa to pioneering of Christianity in Africa

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 William Wade Harris

William Wade Harris was a Liberian Grebo who had been brought up Methodist, but later worked for the Protestant Episcopal Church as a teacher. He fought Americo-Liberian rule and was imprisoned when implicated in a rebellion which would have invited the rather more enlightened British rule into Liberia as a liberation from Americo-Liberian oppression. When in prison he received a vision from the Archangel Gabriel who proclaimed him a prophet sent to prepare the way of Jesus Christ. The Archangel, however, commanded him to abandon the European clothes he took pride in, and particularly the shoes he had just ordered from America. Rejecting European clothes would be the sign of his conversion and the symbol of the simplicity and humility of the gospel message.

Towards the end of 1913 Harris began his preaching journey from Liberia through the Ivory Coast and on into the Gold Coast (modern Ghana). He walked barefoot, wearing a long white robe with black bands across the chest, carrying a tall cross made of cane, a calabash to fill with water for baptism, a gourd rattle, and a Bible. He was accompanied by two or three women (who may have been his wives). These women would sing, dance and play the rattle to accompany his preaching. The response to his preaching was quite extraordinary and the trip, which lasted until early 1915 was the most effective evangelistic crusade in modern African history.

Harris' preaching itself was anything but extraordinary. At its core lay the claim that God and Christ had come to vanquish and replace the spirits of tradition. He taught that Christ's return was imminent and that the people were to prepare for his return by a radical conversion of life. Conversion entailed obeying the Ten Commandments, keeping the Sunday, accepting the authority of the Bible, and burning the fetishes of traditional religion which were thought to keep evil away. In many ways Harris set up a fundamental conflict and contest between Christ and the fetishes. Christ was coming soon and would punish those who rejected his prophet, ignored the Sabbath, kept fetishes or despised his commandments. Harris did not condemn polygamy and may have had several wives himself.

Those who believed the message were immediately baptised, and then told to enter whatever Christian church the missionaries provided for them in their village or town. Where there were no mission churches to send his converts to, Harris, after burning the fetishes, baptising the converts, and giving them some elementary instruction in the Christian faith, appointed twelve apostles in each place to provide leadership. Many of apostles carried out their task with great perseverance, building solid Harrist churches characterized by faithful obedience to the Ten Commandments, observance of Sunday in particular and fidelity to a fairly simple, straightforward gospel of God, Jesus and love. They continued to spread, baptising converts and instructing them in the rudiments of the faith. They also continued to accept polygamy.

One such church, among the Dida in the Ivory Coast, flourished due to the work of the Apostle Latta Gnandjou who was appointed apostle by Harris in January of 1915 and remained leader of the congregation until his death in 1931. Harris gave him a copy of an English bible, which he could hardly read, but his young literate nephew had learned English and accompanied his uncle on his preaching and baptising tours. They built chapels, women among them composed hymns and they developed a strong and healthy church. When the missionaries finally came into their region, these Harrist Christians greeted them with great rejoicing, since they had not forgotten Harris' instructions to join the churches that missionaries provided. The Methodist missionaries, however, found that their intransigence over the issue of polygamy meant that not nearly all of the Harrists became Methodists.

3.2 Agbebi, Mojola (David Brown Vincent) 1860 to 1917

Early leader of the independent church movement in Africa.

The son of a Nigerian (Yoruba) Anglican catechist, Agbebi was given the name David Brown Vincent at baptism. Educated by the Church Missionary Society (CMS) and appointed a teacher in 1878, he left the CMS in 1880 following a disciplinary measure. Converted about 1883 at a Baptist revival service, he and his wife, Adeline Adeotan, then became Baptists. Agbebi played a prominent role in the March 1888 establishment of the Native Baptist Church in Lagos, the first indigenous church in West Africa. Understanding the importance of indigenous African leadership for an African church, he affirmed the richness of African culture and in 1894 discontinued using David Brown Vincent as his name. An exemplary preacher and pastor, he initiated evangelistic work in Yorubaland and in the Niger Delta.

While maintaining his Baptist ambitions, Agbebi was an apostle of ecumenism and an ambassador for Africa at large. His contact in 1895 with a Welsh Baptist, William Hughes, resulted in training for some Africans at the African Training Institute in Wales. In 1903 he visited the United States and Britain to raise some money to support his evangelistic work in West Africa. In 1898 he founded the African Baptist Union of West Africa. He was the first president of the Yoruba Baptist Association, formed in 1914, and he supported his wife's efforts in establishing the nationwide Baptist Women's League in 1919. A visionary, he dedicated his life to evangelism, education and the advancement of African leadership.

3.3 Shembe, Isaiah Mdlwamafa 1869 to 1935

Zulu religious leader and founder of the Nazareth Baptist Church. According to Shembe biographer Irving Hexham, not much is known about Shembe's youth, except that Shembe was born at Ntabamhlophe near Estcourt, Natal, South Africa, of Zulu parentage. After involvement with Wesleyans, he associated with Baptists and was baptized in July 1906. He seems to have acted as an itinerant evangelist prior to coming into contact with Nkabinde, a former Lutheran who was regarded as a prophet. Nkabinde led him to develop a healing ministry in 1910. A year later, he founded the iBandla lamaNazaretha (Nazareth Baptist Church), a controversial religious movement rooted in Zulu tradition. Shortly afterward he acquired a farm that became his holy city of Ekuphakameni and established an annual pilgrimage to the sacred mountain of Nhlankazi. Shembe was noted for his vivid parables, dramatic healings, and uncanny insights into people's thoughts. He wrote many moving hymns, composed music, and provided his followers with a rich liturgical tradition based on modified forms of traditional Zulu dancing. Critics of the movement claim that his followers regarded Shembe as an incarnation of God. Others, led by Lutheran scholar Bengt Sundkler, argued that Shembe's theology was an Africanized form of Christianity.

After Shembe's death a succession conflict occurred before leadership passed to his third wife's son Johannes Galilee Shembe. More serious trouble erupted following J. G. Shembe's death in 1975, when the movement split between his brother, Amos Shembe, and son Londa Shembe. Amos Shembe took the title "bishop" and seems to have led his followers toward orthodox Christianity. Londa Shembe openly admitted that he was unsure whether his movement was Christian, a form of Judaism, or perhaps more closely related to some other religious tradition such as Hinduism. Today there are about one million amaNazaretha in Southern Africa.

4.0 CONCLUSION

Harris continued to preach in Liberia and Sierra Leone but without the success of his Ivory Coast period. He continued to wear his characteristic dress and be amazed at God's work. He died in 1929 in his daughter's house in extreme poverty. One of his favorite hymns was "What a Friend We Have in Jesus." Agbebi was one of the first Africans to hold a degree in civil engineering from a British university but he was primarily known for his missionary work in southern Nigeria and the Cameroons between 1890 and 1910. His belief in Ethiopianism is outlined in the 1902 "Inaugural Sermon" which he gave in Lagos

1.0 INTRODUCTION

In the year that Bishop Samuel Ajayi Crowther died, a 12-year old boy crippled from birth, prayed in an Anglican church in his village for the use of his legs. In response to his prayer at 12 years of age, Orimolade had a dream in which he was presented with a rod, a Royal Insignia and a crown representing victory, power of speech and honor respectively. He woke up from this dream with a personal conversion to the Christian faith and a conviction of his calling to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ but his evangelistic mission did not begin until after a period of seven years in confinement. The nature of this confinement has been a matter of speculation. Some of his close associates at the time attributed this confinement to a protracted illness while others regarded it as a period spent in training and preparation for his missionary work. What is known is that Orimolade emerged from this confinement with a partial recovery of the use of his legs and a remarkable ability to pray and preach the King James Version of the Bible that had been translated into his own native Yoruba language earlier by his tribesman, Bishop Samuel Ajayi Crowther.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you should be able to:

- Draw personal inspiration to spread Christianity from the life of Moses Orimolade Tunolase
- Discuss Moses Orimolade Tunolase's heroic sacrifice and sufferings
- Enumerate Moses Orimolade Tunolase's contribution to the spread of Christianity in Africa.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 Family Background

He was born to a family of herbalist and his father was a powerful oracle consultant. His father's name was Tunolase and his mother's name was Abigail Odijoroto, he was the third in a family of six children with three brothers and two sisters.

3.1.1 Encounter between Orimolade Followers and Masquerades

The converts of Orimolade from paganism to Christianity soon increased in Ikare while idol worshippers and masquerades started to decrease. The idol worshippers felt threatened and mounted a serious fight with cutlasses and charms against Orimolade and his followers. With Orimolade in front and his followers threading carefully behind him, the idol worshippers were captivated by their own charms, turned against each other and cut them.

The police were drafted in and could not believe that people in the same group would fight and injure each other to that extent. Consequently, the followers of Orimolade that were unarmed physically were accused of being responsible for those that were injured. The followers of Orimolade were arrested and taken to Kabba – the provincial headquarter at that time. Moses orimolade went to kabba and preached that God said that all the innocent people in detention should be released. It was at Kabba that the popular C&S song descended: - “E funpe na kikan “which means: “sound the call profoundly “– i.e. for the release of captives. All Orimolade’s followers were released and they came back to Ikare together.

This victory meant that all opponents of Orimolade had to bow down and find a way to compromise and win him to their side. They then decided to bestow upon him one of the highest priestly titles in the town – but being led by the Holy Spirit, he told them that was not his mission on earth.

3.1.2 Other important notable events at Ikare

1. Orimolade would go to farm with his brother Peter Omojola but would not sleep at night; he would sing spiritual songs from night till morning.
2. He was a very good hunter that would go to the bush alone without a cutlass or a gun, yet would come back home with slaughtered animals.
3. He once tried to do business by buying and selling of palm oil and kola nuts. He travelled to a town called Oshokoshoko in Northern Nigeria with his friend. On his way, an angel of God appeared to him and warned him not to jeopardise his mission as a prophet of God with business. He refused to take the warning and as soon as he got to Oshokoshoko, he fell seriously sick, people thought that he would die. His friend returned to Ikare to inform them. His brother Egunjobi was sent to bring him back home, however before Egunjobi got to Oshokoshoko, Orimolade had got back to Ikare, by what means – nobody knew.

4. One day, Orimolade paid his close friend Garuba a visit. As it was getting dark, Orimolade bid his friend goodbye and began to walk home (bearing in mind that he was crippled and could only walk with the aid of a stick). His friend Garuba decided to discover the mystery as to how Orimolade walks about. So Garuba mounted his bicycle and started to follow or chase Orimolade but he never saw or overtook Orimolade along the way. On getting to Orimolade's house, Garuba met him at home – Surprise! Surprise! Orimolade asked Garuba what he was trying to investigate.
5. Orimolade fasted for three months after which he called his mother to fetch water and bath for him. Afterwards he told his mother that he wanted to prepare a feast for the town and asked his mother to assemble the pots and be ready for feast preparation. To everybody's amazement including his mother, people started to walk in with loads of foodstuff as gifts – which exceeded what they needed.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

What personal lesson can you derive from Orimolade's divine encounters?

3.2 The missionary journey

Orimolade started his missionary work as an itinerant preacher in Ikare (his Yoruba town of birth) with no formal education. He preached the Bible with an astonishing degree of clarity and prayed for people with instant and awesome results. He openly confronted witches and wizards in Irun (another Yoruba town) and pulled down the image of Osijora, one of the idols worshipped in the village. He condemned the prevalent practice of human sacrifice in Benin City. He consecrated a pool in Kaba town and rid it of the evil spirit the villagers had worshipped from time immemorial. Orimolade converted many people to the Christian faith in many places. Traditional worshippers on several occasions willingly gave up their charms and images for burning in response to his preaching and prayer. He directed his converts to the existing churches irrespective of denominations and where no church existed he helped establish one. Some of the churches established by Orimolade were actually established for the Church Missionary Society.

The African people converted to the Christian faith heretofore by the members of the Church Missionary Society for the Anglican Church and were introduced to the Bible with Christianized western world views and European moral values, that contradicted and contravened the nature and culture of the African people. The missionaries were more scientific and less spiritual than their African Christian converts. They made no holy inquiries for members of the church on matters affecting their lives. The concept of health and disease practiced and preached by the missionaries were rational and scientific with no recognition for the spiritual basis of health and disease. The quest of the people for the spiritual causes of diseases and their prayerful pursuit of cures were often shunned and scorned by the missionaries. The manifestations of the gifts of the Holy Spirit among the African Christian converts were misunderstood and mistaken by the missionaries for diabolical African voodoo. The imperial imposition of western moral values culminated in the dissolution of polygamous marriages, the disruption of polygamous families and the bastardization of the children from these African traditional marriages as the missionaries subverted and supplanted the Great Commission with imperial motives and missions.

The African people read several passages of the Bible literally and were more comfortable with the Biblical concepts of exorcism, faith healing, rain-making and rain-stopping than the missionaries. The disregard of the missionaries for the Biblical liberty apparent on the pages of the scriptures degenerated into clashes and conflicts between the missionaries and the African leadership in the Anglican Church. The people started to see the missionaries as political agents of their respective governments with a preference for the promotion and propagation of European morals and values on the platform of Christianity. The blind insistence of the missionaries on the superiority of the European concept of Christianity provided the moral impetus for the denial of the African leadership the right to succeed Bishop Samuel Ajayi Crowther and left the African people in the Anglican Church disconnected and discontented with an overwhelming sense of indifference.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Discuss the differences in spirituality between the African converts and the Missionaries

3.3 Formation of the Eternal Sacred Order of the Cherubim and Seraphim (ESOC&S)

In direct response to the discrepancies between the Biblical precepts and mission practice the people started gathering into prayer groups called Egbe Aladura. The Aladuras promoted and popularized the power of prayer to heal. When the 1918 influenza pandemic spread to West Africa the people sought and found healing amongst the Aladuras. The 1918 influenza pandemic (Spanish flu) lasted from March 1918 to June 1920, spreading to the arctic and the remote pacific islands with an estimated loss of over 50 million lives worldwide. The healing and survival of so many Nigerians among the Aladuras during the Spanish flu spurred the growth and spread of these prayer groups in the early 1920s. Moses Orimolade arrived in Lagos on July 12, 1924 and lodged at Holy Trinity (Anglican) Church with the Sexton of the Church, Emmanuel Olumodeji from his hometown.

He started preaching and praying for people all over Lagos in Nigeria. Many people in and around Holy Trinity sought after Orimolade for spiritual inquiry and counseling. He developed a reputation for seasoned preaching and fervent prayer and became known among the people as the “Baba Aladura” (Father that prays). The prosperity and popularity of Moses Orimolade provoked envy and anger among the Anglican leadership and led ultimately to the ejection of the Baba Aladura from the premises of Holy Trinity on the 11th day of September, 1924. The ejection of Moses Orimolade from Holy Trinity aroused the sympathy and support of many people in and around the Church. They followed Orimolade out of Holy Trinity and thereafter to his places of residence. Orimolade called this group of supporters and sympathizers the “Aladura Band” and continued his preaching and prayer with them.

On the 18th day of June 1925 the Aladura Band was called to the rescue of an unconscious Methodist teenage girl, Abiodun Akinsowon, who had fallen into a trance when she tried to look into the chalice carried by the Catholic Archbishop on Corpus Christi public procession. Abiodun remained in trance for 21 days in care and custody of the Aladura Band under the leadership of Moses Orimolade. She regained consciousness after 21 days to the awe of many in Lagos and joined the Aladura Band. She became the first visioner in the Aladura band. The name of the band was changed to the Seraph Band on the 9th of September 1925 by Moses Orimolade. The addition of Cherubim to the name of the band was advised by spiritual injunction on the 26th day of March 1926 to reflect the heavenly representation of the Cherubim and Seraphim. The band was fully formed and functional by the end of 1925. Moses Orimolade reigned as the Sole Founder and Spiritual head of the band from 1925 to 1933.

Abiodun Akinsowon led the evangelistic tours of the band from Lagos westward. She established most of the early branches of the band in the west of Nigeria. The reputation of Abiodun Akinsowon for effective leadership earned her the appellation “Captain Abiodun” in the band. She was adored by Moses Orimolade and admired by many members of the band. Abiodun Akinsowon rode with Moses Orimolade in the hammock chair to the envy of many men and women in the band. However, she pulled out of the band in 1929 to form the Cherubim and Seraphim Society after she failed to convince Moses Orimolade to refuse the volunteer housekeeping services of a widow (Iya Ijesha) that had been healed in the band. The elders of the western branches of the band declared independence and formed the Sacred Order of Cherubim and Seraphim following their futile effort to reunite Abiodun Akinsowon and Moses Orimolade.

In 1930 a committee of elders was chosen to draft the Article of Association in preparation for the incorporation of the band. The first draft of the Article of Association was rejected by Moses Orimolade to the fury of some of the authors because of an unauthorized clause that transferred the executive power and control of the band to the membership of the band. The infuriated authors of the rejected draft of the Article of Association pulled out of the band in 1930 to form the Praying Band of the Eternal Sacred Order of the Cherubim and Seraphim under the leadership of Ezekiel Davies. The northern branches of the band simply moved on as the Holy Order of the Cherubim and Seraphim Movement. The mother band was renamed and registered in 1930 as the Eternal Sacred Order of the Cherubim and Seraphim (ESOC&S) with Moses Orimolade as the Sole Founder and Supreme Head “Baba Aladura”.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Explain the reasons for the formation and impact of ESOC AND S to the spread of Christianity in Africa

4.0 CONCLUSION

The availability of the translations of the scriptures in African vernaculars brought the Bible to life among the African people and changed their views of the missionaries and the missions. The people found in the Bible the true expression and essence of Christian spirituality that strengthened and supported their innate aspirations for miracles and mastery of life. The Biblical mode of worship with drumming, clapping and dancing resonated so well with the African people and created enormous challenges for the missionaries and their European concept of worship.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

Daddy Osofa was one of the early converts to Christianity in Porto Novo and in the light of his domestic problems he prayed ceaselessly to God to give him a baby boy who would live to inherit his wealth and immortalize his name after his death. It was therefore not very surprising that in 1909 in answer to Daddy Osofa's prayers Mama Alake Iyafu safely delivered a male child. The joy with which Daddy Osofa received the news of the birth of his first son cannot be described. In accordance with Methodist practice, the child was blessed in the church and later christened as Samuel Bilewu, a Christian name with the biblical meaning "gift of God" and an indigenous name derived from a proverb in the Yoruba language Bi 'le aiye wu ko gbe, sugbon mo mo wipe mo ti toro re lodo Olorun which means: "If the world pleases the child let him stay, but I know I've asked God for you."

2.0 OBJECTIVES

It is hoped that by the end of this unit, you should be able to;

- Draw personal Inspiration to spread Christianity from the life of Oschoffa Samuel Bilewu
- Describe the formation of the Celestial Church of Christ
- Discuss Oschoffa's contribution to the spread of Christianity in Africa

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 EARLY LIFE

In appreciation and fulfilment of his vows to God, Daddy Osofa sent Samuel Bilewu Osofa to an evangelist called Pastor Nathaniel Yansunu of the Methodist mission in Porto Novo when the boy was seven years old, for spiritual training and to learn Christian principles. Osofa did this because he feared for the survival of his only son, should the child reside at his house, especially as he had lost all of his other children between birth and puberty. However, at the early age of seven, S. B. J. Osofa was too young to be sent away from his parents and so he could not cope with the domestic challenges of the mission house and he chose to return home.

By 1922, at the age of thirteen, S. B. J. Oschoffa was still at home as he did not have access to western education for reasons beyond his control. Daddy Osofa sent him once again to the mission house to receive basic Christian training. He was there with many other boys of his age group. It must have been at the mission house that S. B. J. Oschoffa adopted the name Joseph and also anglicized the spelling of Oschoffa. He was thereafter called S. B. J. Oschoffa. At the mission house, Oschoffa could not cope with the strict disciplinary measures which a white missionary called Rev. Gamer initiated basically because of his stubbornness. At one time, when the pastor ordered the boys to assist in the construction of a seminary, Oschoffa defied the orders and refused to participate in the construction of the building. As a result Oschoffa and others were expelled from the mission house. In December 1946, almost seven years after his father's death; Oschoffa abandoned carpentry to take up trading in timber.

He began supplying timber logs to carpenters in and around Porto Novo. He seemed to have enjoyed his monopoly in this business which, according to him, fetched him about ten times the amount of money he had initially invested. Even though Oschoffa had not received any formal education, in his short stay at the mission house he had learned to read the Holy Bible. Everywhere he went Oschoffa carried his Bible along. It must be remembered that right from his birth, his father had encouraged him to be a good Christian. His enthusiasm in church duties and his role in the choir made him one of the respected Methodists in Porto Novo.

3.2 Divine visitation on Osochoffa

On May 23, 1947, Oschoffa left home for Toffin, a village in the Ganvie area to carry out his usual business. He had already purchased a canoe for himself but since he did not know how to paddle, he engaged the services of a paid paddler. He set off in the morning for the forest specifically to look for mahogany and ebony trees. Oschoffa, as usual, equipped himself with food, drinking water and other personal effects for the trip. At the shore, Oschoffa instructed the paddler to keep an eye on the canoe and the items inside it while he entered the forest. Oschoffa combed the forest searching for the correct species of mahogany and ebony. Oschoffa himself said he noticed a sudden change in the weather when the sky darkened.

This spectacle terrified him and, as a result, he opened his Bible, which he always carried with him, and read some Psalms to strengthen his faith. It soon dawned on him that the abnormality in the weather was an eclipse of the sun. The eclipse, though short, was noticeable in many villages around Porto Novo. The phenomenon of an eclipse is usually given various interpretations in Africa. It could be interpreted as indicating the imminent death of a great man. It could also foretell the occurrence of a disaster or another great event. At any rate, the disappearance of the light of the sun caused Oschoffa much anxiety. While he knelt down to pray for God's guidance, Oschoffa claimed to have heard a strange voice shouting, "Luli, Luli, Luli." He looked up and to his great surprise he saw a white monkey with wings, its mouth wide open, sitting on the branch of a tree. Next to the strange monkey was a multi-coloured bird which resembled a peacock. It must be mentioned that these two creatures are abnormal because in Africa, there are no white monkeys and no monkey has wings. Furthermore, the multi-coloured bird had features which shone with light.

While Oschoffa was still contemplating the meaning of all this and the power behind such an event his attention was drawn to a noise from the ground. He looked down and saw a short snake, about thirty centimetres long. The wonderful scene compelled Oschoffa to retreat to the shore. On his return, he found the paddler writhing in pain. He immediately prayed to God for quick healing and laid his hands on the paddler. The paddler was immediately healed and later confessed to stealing some of Oschoffa's food kept in his custody. Oschoffa rebuked him for being greedy because he had been adequately cared for and he had just stolen out of greed. Oschoffa decided to relax under a nearby tree to reflect on the events he had experienced that day. When he woke up, he found that the paddler had disappeared, leaving the canoe behind.

Oschoffa was left alone and was stranded as he could not paddle on his own. In his attempt to find a way back home, Oschoffa said he lost his way in the forest. He was believed to have stayed in the bush for three months during which he claimed to have eaten only honey. He continued roaming about in the forest in his attempt to find a way back home. During those three months, he was believed to have seen many revelations about the Kingdom of God. It was during these months that Oschoffa observed changes in his body and received spiritual gifts. He ascribed his power to heal the sick to the manifestation of the Holy Spirit in his life in the forest. There is no doubt that Oschoffa's faith in God was greatly affirmed at this time.

After three months in the forest, he came to an inselberg which the local people called Fagbe located near the village of Zinvie. At this place he met a man called Michell. Incidentally, this man reportedly became a prominent member of the church later founded by Oschoffa. Michell, being very familiar with the terrain, led Oschoffa to the nearest village called Hungon. Under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, Oschoffa prayed for the inhabitants of the village. He also got a new paddler who volunteered to help him paddle his canoe back to Porto Novo. After a long search, they found the abandoned canoe at Agange, a few kilometres from Toffin. They had hardly settled down in the canoe when Oschoffa heard some mourners crying at Agange. Oschoffa immediately ordered the paddler to head for the village, wanting to establish the cause of the wailing among the people.

He was told that a young man called Kudiho who was a staunch member of the local Methodist Church was in a coma. Kudiho had been ill for a long time and all efforts to cure him had proved futile. Under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, Oschoffa asked all the people to leave the house of the sick man. He then placed his hands on the sick man and prayed in the name of Jesus Christ for healing and immediately Kudiho was said to have been healed. It must be noted that this was Oschoffa's second healing of the sick after the vision in the wilderness. The news of Kudiho's miraculous healing spread like wild fire and Oschoffa's name soon became a household word. At Agange, Yusuf, a Muslim, offered to be Oschoffa's host after the miracle. It was this man who told the people in the vicinity about Oschoffa's newfound powers.

At home, Oschoffa's family had concluded that he was dead and so the news of his being alive was received with astonishment and great relief. Yusuf was believed to have described Oschoffa as a wonder-working man who healed the sick in the name of Jesus Christ just by touching them. Oschoffa was however described as being somewhat unkempt and wearing wretched clothes. This portrait of Oschoffa was the result of his having being lost for months in the forest. People could not believe the story about Oschoffa and those who knew him were anxious to follow Yusuf to Agange to find out the truth. Meanwhile, Oschoffa had left Agange for Dasatre, his hometown, after hiring a new paddler called Zinsou. Barely three days after his return to Dasatre, the news reached him that a nephew of his called Guton was dead. Oschoffa was inspired to go to the house of the deceased. When he arrived, he first dismissed the native doctors, fetish priests, herbalists and others who had been making abortive efforts to revive Guton and then opened his Bible and read some Psalms. Oschoffa was quoted as saying: "Really, God is unveiling his powers." He prayed to God to prove his power over death. In the name of Jesus he commanded the dead body to wake up and praise God. Immediately, Guton arose and the Holy Spirit descended on him and he started prophesying.

This miracle was a clear testimony of God's power in Oschoffa. The news of this miraculous raising of a dead man spread in and around Porto Novo. People were very surprised and could not understand the source of Oschoffa's power. They knew him as a carpenter and nothing more. Others ascribed Oschoffa's powers to Satan and called him the devil's disciple. Muslims, Christians and especially western missionaries were very sceptical. Some of them said Oschoffa's miraculous healings were unorthodox and not inspired by God. The Cherubim and Seraphim Movement (C&S) which had been established around 1925 at Porto Novo was also cold in its reception of Oschoffa and his new powers, despite the fact that they practiced faith and spiritual healings too.

3.3 Oschoffa's Trance

On September 29, 1947, while meditating with some well-wishers in his house, Oschoffa claimed to have witnessed a mysterious and divine appearance, where a winged angel bathed in an intense light stood before him. The angel of the Lord allegedly delivered the following message to S. B. J. Oschoffa in the Egun language which reads in English: Peace be with you. It is the wish of God to send you on an errand of preaching to the world. Many nominal Christians when confronted by difficulties and problems of this world run after fetish priests and other powers of darkness for all kinds of assistance. Consequently, at their death they cannot see Christ because, by their action, Satan has left his spiritual mark on them. To assist you in your work so that men may listen to and follow your miraculous works of healing: divine healing will be carried out by you in the name of Jesus Christ. These works of divine healing and God's spiritual mark on you will testify to the fact that God sent you.

This was Oschoffa's great commission. The appearance of the angel of the Lord was later confirmed by a woman called Marie Zevenu who claimed to have seen a vision of Jesus Christ visiting Oschoffa. In her vision, she said she saw Oschoffa's body illuminated and sparkling like a twinkling star. Marie Zevenu later visited Oschoffa to see whether his body was actually transformed. Oschoffa admitted having been visited by an angel of the Lord. Marie, accompanied by her husband, Fredrick Zevenu, a catholic, left for home full of joy and inspiration. The news of the visitation of the angel of the Lord to Oschoffa in no time spread throughout the ancient city of Porto Novo and its surroundings. As usual, adversaries, reactionaries and many doubting Thomases made unfavourable comments. Oschoffa's name and many of his miraculous healings were associated with magic, but it is interesting to note that the western missionary churches while condemning the wonders being performed by Oschoffa, did not succeed in stopping their members from seeking prayers and healings from him.

3.3.1 Oschoffa in Public

As expected, Oschoffa's residence soon became a centre of attraction as more and more people visited him daily. There was virtually nothing he could do to minimize or regulate the frequency of visits. An attempt made for police control did not materialize. However, a suggestion by the police officer at Porto Novo that a convention should be arranged with the people in an open place seemed to have solved the problem. Consequently, an open air convention was arranged and people in the thousands thronged to Porto Novo. It undoubtedly offered an opportunity for those sceptical about the authenticity of Oschoffa's power and credibility to see things for themselves.

Muslims, Catholics, Protestants, traditionalists and other interested groups were largely represented at the open air convention. It was a remarkable day because it was the first time Oschoffa was holding such an event. As earlier stated, at about this time the Cherubim and Seraphim Society, another independent African Church under the leadership of Prophet Moses Orimolade had established a branch of that church in Porto Novo. Oral tradition has it that Oschoffa was one of the staunch members of the Cherubim and Seraphim Society at Porto Novo but later withdrew his membership because of a misunderstanding between him and some members who claimed control over the local church. However, at Porto Novo, it was alleged that Oschoffa withdrew his membership from the Cherubim and Seraphim Society because of a charge of adultery voiced against him. The prophet denied this and claimed that he was never a member of the Cherubim and Seraphim Society though he was friendly with the society.

The inference one could draw from this is that the emergence of Oschoffa as a new spiritual leader of a religious group was not in the interest of the existing churches in Porto Novo, especially the Cherubim and Seraphim Church and the Methodist Church, both of which Oschoffa was said to have belonged to at one time or the other. It was therefore not surprising that the first question at the open convention came from a certain Alexander Aganyimi, a leading member of the Cherubim and Seraphim Church, who supposedly asked: "We understand that Moses Orimolade was sent by God and it is true that he works wonders in God's name. Now, you Oschoffa, also claim to have been sent by God. Which of you do we have to follow?" Oschoffa replied that John the Baptist came before Christ and people thought that he was the Messiah. Similarly, Cherubim and Seraphim are both attendant angels of the Lord and so the church by that name is a forerunner of the Church of Christ, come to prepare the way.

Another man, a member of the Catholic Church, asked whether Oschoffa who claimed that his power was from Christ would go to Rome (the Vatican), in the same way St. Peter and St. Paul took the Catholic Church to Rome. Oschoffa was quoted to have replied philosophically saying: Young man, we gave you one kobo to hold and you held on to it; now we are telling you to reject the one kobo and accept two kobo because the glory of two kobo is more than that of one kobo. But if you refuse to relinquish one kobo, at a future time when you come to see the glory of the two kobo, you will want to retrace your steps and embrace them, but it will be too late as others will have taken your place.

His intelligent answers moved most people who had thought that Oschoffa would not live up to their expectations. It is even said that many sick people were healed at the convention. Most people left there fully convinced of the manifestation of God's power in Oschoffa's ministry. The convention seemed to have achieved tremendous success and the misconception about Oschoffa's religious movement appeared to have been corrected.

3.4 The Formation of the "Celestial Church of Christ"

It was now necessary to bring together the large concourse of followers into a fold, a congregation or a church. All Oschoffa noticed was that things were unfolding by divine intervention. No meeting was held to discuss the name of the new church. The name of the church was believed to have come down from heaven by divine revelation through a certain Alexander Yanga who was one of the early followers of Prophet Oschoffa healed by him through the power of the Holy Spirit. Yanga was believed to have been in a trance for seven consecutive days. At the end of the seventh day, he reportedly saw the name of the church boldly written on the rainbow. He accordingly asked for a piece of chalk and, looking at the rainbow, wrote the name of the church as shown to him, Eglise du Christianisme Céleste, which means "Celestial Church of Christ." After this divine revelation proclaimed the name of Oschoffa's religious movement, his followers soon began to identify themselves as Celestians. He explained that the Celestial Church worship is a carbon copy of the worship of God by the angels in heaven,--an argument the hymn Tani mo bi attempts to justify.

What was unique in the origin of the Celestial Church of Christ that wasn't in other Aladura Churches before it? Members of the sect always point to the mode of worship and the name allegedly sent from heaven as unique. Undoubtedly, S. B. J. Oschoffa like most founders of new churches, intended to give the church credibility by associating it with heavenly origins. Orimolade, Captain Abiodun, Emmanuel and Ositelu all did the same. It is hard to find any church founders who did not trace the founding of their sect or church to celestial authority or divine revelation.

Oschoffa's name became synonymous with miraculous healings and people in Porto Novo and beyond anxiously waited the day he would visit them. The Celestial Church of Christ grew by leaps and bounds after the formal proclamation of the Holy Spirit's orders through Alexander Yanga. Oschoffa was soon proclaimed a prophet by the ever increasing followers. Apart from being called a prophet of God, Oschoffa was also allowed to use the title of "pastor" even though he had not attended any seminary nor been ordained as such. Through divine orders, the use of the name Epastoral, which was believed to have been uttered by an angel, was conferred on him. The term was allegedly translated to him as pastor. Thus, the founder of the Celestial Church of Christ became known as Pastor, Founder, and Prophet S. B. J. Oschoffa.

3.5 Miracles and Reactions

A lady called Tinavie of Zevu was said to have died in a hospital at Porto Novo. Her younger sister Mawulowoe--a name which means "God will oblige"--was with Prophet Oschoffa seeking spiritual help. Upon hearing the news of her sister's death, the Holy Spirit was said to have descended upon Mawulowoe. Then and there she prophesied that Tinavie's body would be raised by Oschoffa in the name of the Lord, provided the corpse was brought to him. Prophet Oschoffa accordingly requested that Tinavie's body be brought to his house. When the corpse was brought in, he told the bereaved family to put it on the floor. Prior to this, Tinavie was said to have been certified clinically dead by one Dr. Alexander. The other residents of Prophet Oschoffa's house were predominantly Muslims who abhorred any delay in burying dead bodies. In fact, the presence of Tinavie's dead body was becoming an abominable sight to the residents of the house.

Oschoffa was looked upon as the devil's disciple who was displaying black power. On the spot the Holy Spirit was said to have descended upon him, and under the impulse of the Holy Spirit, he commanded the dead lady to stand up in the name of Jesus Christ. Eyewitness accounts confirmed that Tinavie was immediately revived and she got up. Immediately after her healing the Holy Spirit was said to have descended on her too. She prophesied about Oschoffa as a prophet of God. It was also said that after she had regained normalcy, Prophet Oschoffa asked Mawulowoe to lead Tinavie (the revived woman) to the hospital where the latter had earlier been declared clinically dead. A story is told of how Dr. Alexander panicked and almost lost consciousness upon seeing and recognizing Tinavie. According to Prophet Oschoffa, after the miracle, both Tinavie and Mawulowoe remained faithful members of the Celestial Church of Christ.

The news of this miracle had hardly died down when another miracle was performed by Oschoffa. A close friend of Prophet Oschoffa named Moishe Suru Afoyan who hailed from Zevu died unexpectedly and his relatives accordingly sent a message to Oschoffa to mourn with the bereaved family. Oschoffa received the news with shock and was extremely sorrowful. Prophet Oschoffa accompanied by some sympathizers left for Zevu. The Holy Spirit was said to have descended upon Prophet Oschoffa who ordered the bereaved family and the sympathizers present to leave the room where the dead body was laid. He covered the corpse with one of his clothes and prayed to God to manifest His powers. By twelve midnight, Moishe Suru Afoyan was revived. He accordingly joined the Celestial Church and remained a devoted member until his death. This miracle was still on the lips of many when we called to verify this at Zevu.

Oschoffa had now become a controversial figure in the French Colony of Dahomey (now Republic of Benin) and a major topic of discussion. Some people however were still sceptical about the new religious movement in spite of the series of wonders he had performed. Many people, on the other hand, believed he was sent by God while some attributed his powers to some strange esoteric force. In the course of these discussions about his powers, another miracle followed which really put Oschoffa in the limelight throughout the colony. This time it was a call from Grand-Popo, and historical town located near the border between the Republic of Benin and Togo. Grand-Popo's land was being eroded by the sea and many houses along the shore were gradually being washed away. This was a great threat to the inhabitants of the town. More importantly, all attempts made by fetish priests, traditionalists and Muslims to control the erosion had failed.

In 1949, during their annual Christmas meeting, the people of Grand-Popo resolved to solicit Prophet Oschoffa's help as they had heard about his power to work miracles. A delegation was sent to Prophet Oschoffa in early 1950 by the chief of Grand-Popo begging the prophet to come to their aid in the name of God whom, they believed, had sent him. Acting under divine inspiration, Prophet Oschoffa took about six of his followers with him and left his base in Porto Novo for Grand-Popo. Among the elders of the church who accompanied him were Wolider Afore, Yanga and his wife Madam Silvestina Yanga and Mathias. At Grand-Popo, Prophet Oschoffa and his team were warmly received by the chief, the elders and the people of the town who had by then assembled at the sea shore. Among the gathering was a white Roman Catholic priest (whose name Prophet Oschoffa could not remember).

The Divine Order allegedly instructed Prophet Oschoffa to call for an egg which can be interpreted as representing the earth. Furthermore, the Divine Order told him to call for a needle which likewise represented the sea. Prophet Oschoffa then pierced the egg with the needle and threw both into the sea after some short extempore prayers. Immediately the sea receded and miraculously stopped at the exact place where the egg had fallen. This story was confirmed by two elderly Roman Catholics from Grand-Popo who confessed that they were present at the time of the historical event and that they were then about thirty-five and forty years old respectively. These two men who said they were members of the Olympio family gave their names as Jean Olympio and François Olympio respectively. The local Methodist presbyter just a stone's throw from the site of the incident also confirmed the veracity of the Grand-Popo miracle. The confirmation of the two Olympio brothers who are Catholics as well as the testimony of the local Methodist presbyter no doubt lent some credibility to this story.

The news of Prophet Oschoffa's miracle at Grand-Popo further added to the misgivings of the existing churches, especially the Catholic, Methodist, and the Cherubim and Seraphim Organizations, who argued that Oschoffa was using black or evil powers. But not so with the local people who said the miracles were the manifestation of the Holy Spirit in Oschoffa. As a result, the Celestial Church of Christ was besieged by many new adherents who joined daily. The rate at which many Christians defected from their parent churches to join the new church was alarming. In an interview Pastor Simon Dossou confirmed that about half of the members of the mission churches--the Roman Catholic Church and the Methodist Church--were believed to have been lost to the Celestial Church of Christ.

Scientifically, the Grand-Popo miracle defies all credible explanations. However, we are principally concerned with faith. McPherson once stated that the choice between the miraculous and the non-miraculous explanation is sometimes seen as something to be decided on the basis of evidence. He concisely defined a miracle as an event which both is and is not capable of being explained in natural terms. Initially, Oschoffa's followers seemed to have been people who were members of some big western Christian churches and they continued to go to their churches while receiving prayers from Prophet Oschoffa. Prayer meetings were therefore arranged so as to avoid clashes with the normal service of other churches. This was worked out after some meetings between representatives of the existing churches and Prophet Oschoffa. Thus Wednesdays and Fridays were selected as days for open air services and meditations.

3.5.1 Oschoffa's Tribulations

The number of adherents kept on increasing as the days passed and soon most of them stopped attending services at their old churches. Soon Prophet Oschoffa was antagonized by the French colonial administration. Perhaps at the instigation of the authorities of the orthodox churches he was accused of inciting government workers to neglect their official duties especially on Wednesdays and Fridays. It must be noted that civil and public servants who joined the Celestial Church of Christ left their official duties earlier than the stipulated time of closing for Celestial Church worship during the week. It was therefore not surprising that the French colonial administration in Dahomey expressed concern about the activities of Oschoffa and his followers. He was labelled an economic saboteur.

Another accusation levelled against Prophet Oschoffa and his followers was that they were partly responsible for the moral decadence in Dahomey because there were growing cases of divorce, fornication and adultery. An historian by the name of Claude Prince, of Porto Novo, explained that since the majority of Prophet Oschoffa's followers were young and were predominantly women, aggrieved husbands as well as those opposed to the establishment and activities of the Celestial Church for one reason or the other may have been the source of these unsubstantiated accusations and trumped up charges.

When the colonial administration and the mission churches found out that the Celestial Church was really difficult to stop, moves were initiated to restrain and control the prophet and the activities of the Celestial Church. The prophet was told that if he wanted recognition, he should register with the Council of Protestant Churches in Dahomey (Republic of Benin). Tied to this condition was a clause which ordered the compulsory return of the members to their parent churches. Naturally the followers of Prophet Oschoffa did not accept this infringement on their fundamental right to freedom of worship. Oschoffa's refusal to abide by the order and regulations of registration was a result of the fear that the Council of Protestant Churches would in the long run be a stumbling block to the growth of his church. Under normal conditions in Benin, clubs, associations, fraternities, churches and organizations are required to be legally registered within their affiliated groups.

There was a deadlock over the registration order and the subsequent antagonism against Prophet Oschoffa and the Celestial Church went on unabated. During this period of tension, there were many invitations from numerous parishes around Porto Novo asking Prophet Oschoffa to visit them. Prophet Oschoffa decided to leave Porto Novo for Agange in the Toffin district perhaps to diffuse the tension and withdraw from public view. While he was away, detractors and blackmailers of his church thought that they had succeeded in curtailing his activities and those of the Celestial Church of Christ.

3.6 Oschoffa's contribution to church growth.

By 1950, the Celestial Church (C.C.C.) had spread from Agange across the entire Toffin district to Gbaji from where it entered into Nigeria through some fishermen who were Celestials. Makoko parish which now functions as the diocesan headquarters is ostensibly the first branch of the Celestial Church in Nigeria. The Celestial Church of Christ reached Makoko at the same time it reached Toffin district through the legendary seven disciples of Oschoffa.

Oschoffa himself finally gave in to both internal and external pressures and left Porto Novo for Makoko escorted by Moses Ajovi on March 3, 1951. According to the C.C.C. traditions the Makoko parish was jointly established by Superior Senior Leader François, Senior Leader Layon and five others now deceased. The arrival of the pastor-founder in 1951 opened a new chapter in the growth of the church. For almost a decade the C.C.C. was hardly known outside the metropolis of Lagos and its surrounding area. In fact, the main activities of the new church were centred around Makoko.

The Celestial Church of Christ had a relatively small representation in the sixties in Nigeria. Very little attention was paid to the sect. This was probably because of the might of the big mission churches which completely eclipsed the feeble efforts to introduce the C.C.C. into Nigeria. However, the decade 1970-80 witnessed a phenomenal growth in the Celestial Church in Nigeria. Within ten years, the new sect had reached virtually every local government area of the Yoruba-speaking regions of Nigeria from its main base at Makoko. By 1982, almost every town and village had a parish of the Celestial Church through the individual efforts of persons who had come into contact with the new sect in Lagos. There is no doubt that the famous Iyabo Olorunkoya--Indian hemp--case in London in 1970 drew the attention of Nigerians to the Celestial Church of Christ for the first time. Iyabo Olorunkoya, a Lagos socialite, allegedly defied the advice of a Celestial Church woli ("leader" or wolider) and travelled to London. The arrest and subsequent trial attracted national attention to the sect. People now wanted to know more about the C.C.C. and benefit from the prophecies, trances and visions of the church prophets.

Another factor that helped the spread of the Celestial Church was the Nigerian oil boom of the seventies. People had enough oil and more to spare. As a result, very many rich individuals sponsored the establishment of parishes into which shepherds and workers were recruited. Individual owners were encouraged to establish parishes and this practice helped in no small measure in the spread of the Celestial Church. The use of the Yoruba language in worship and other liturgical practices of the sect offered tremendous attraction. The situation was further enhanced by the striking similarity between the Yoruba traditional religious practices and the C.C.C. worship and liturgical practices. Despite the absence of any organized conversion into the sect, it experienced phenomenal growth and spread to Badagry, Ibadan, Epe, Zaria, Kaduna, Kano, Onitsha, Aba, Owerri, London, New York and other world capitals wherever you found black people between 1970 and 1980. Thus did Samuel Bilewu Oschoffa give the Celestial Church of Christ to the world and thousands hearkened to his voice.

3.6.1 Oshoffa's Death

The sudden home call of the enigmatic pastor-founder was unexpected. Nobody knew that death would strike the day it did. Many had taken Oschoffa for a god. Do gods die? The journey into the world beyond began for Oschoffa on September 1, 1985. He was on his way to Ibadan Army Barracks C.C.C. parish harvest. His car, driven by Espedit, an experienced driver, was only about seventeen kilometres from Ibadan. It was speeding along when suddenly one of the tires exploded. The car skidded and somersaulted about four times before landing in the bush. Oschoffa escaped death but was half conscious and dazed. The unconscious pastor and his bleeding driver were driven back to Lagos for quick treatment at Labi's Hospital, Ilupeju. Everybody sighed in relief, happy that the worst was over for the pastor-founder after his miraculous escape.

His great escape from this fatal accident in which two of his dear aides died on the spot helped to boost the myth of immortality surrounding him especially among his followers and most Nigerians. As News watch put it, in the early hours of September 10, 1985, in an ironic twist of fate, death struck. The pastor-founder, one of the greatest Nigerians of our age, quietly breathed his last on a chair at First Shadrach Hospital, Ilupeju, having been certified fit by doctors who were putting finishing touches to his release. The remains of the pastor-founder, Pa S. B. J. Oschoffa were finally laid to rest on Saturday, October 10, 1985, in his mother's hometown, Imeko, the Celestial City, amidst pomp and pageantry, mourning and thanksgiving.

4.0 CONCLUSION

As a result of the rapid growth of the Celestial Church and the popularity of Oschoffa, reactionaries and detractors began to undermine the new religious movement and its leadership. In the first place, miraculous healings and miracles were both condemned as anachronistic and were described as devilish. The Catholic Church was bitterly opposed to the Celestial Church and its practices. However, the Cherubim and Seraphim Church seemed to have been somewhat moderate in their attack against Oschoffa and his movement because they also practiced spiritual healing. Oschoffa was blessed both in life and in death. He lived like a god, revered and worshipped. He also died like a god, leaving mysteriously as he had come, thus keeping the Oschoffa myth intact. Like a god, his death shook the entire Celestial world and beyond. News watch described his burial in the following terms: The Earth quake in exclamation, the stars blinked to refocus, the sea water rose in disbelief, the birds sang a dirge in sympathy, while the seismic vibrations of these rumblings ricocheted against the wailing walls of the Celestial world.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

Pastor Medayese wrote in his book Itan Igbe dide Woli Ayo Babalola that mysterious circumstances surrounded the birth of Babalola. On that day, it was believed that a strange and mighty object exploded and shook the clouds. Just like the Old Testament prophets, Babalola was called by God into the prophetic office to stand before men. His was a specific and personal call.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you should be able to:

- Draw practical Inspiration from the Life and Ministry of Babalola Joseph Ayodele which will enable you spread Christianity today
- Describe the formation of C.A.C in Nigeria
- Enumerate Babalola's contribution to the spread of Christianity in Africa

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 Background of Joseph Ayodele Babalola

Joseph Ayodele Babalola was born on April 25, 1904 to David Rotimi and Madam Marta Talabi who belonged to the Anglican Church. The family lived at Odo-Owa in Ilofa, a small town about ninety kilometres from Ilorin in Kwara State, Nigeria. His father was the Baba Ijo ("church father") of the C.M.S. Church at Odo-Owa. On January 18, 1914, young Babalola was taken by his brother M. O. Rotimi, Sunday school teacher in the C.M.S. Church at Ilofa to Osogbo. Babalola started school at Ilofa and got as far as standard five at All Saints' School, Osogbo. However, he quit school when he decided to learn a trade and became a motor mechanic apprentice. Again, he did not continue long in this vocation before joining the Public Works Department (PWD). He was among the road workers who constructed the road from Igbara-Oke to Ilesa, working as a steam roller driver.

3.1.1 Babalola's Call to Ministry

Babalola's strange experience started on the night of September 25th, 1928 when he suddenly became restless and could not sleep. This went on for a week and he had no inkling of the causes of such a strange experience. The climax came one day when he was, as usual, working on the Ilesa-Igbara-Oke road. Suddenly the steam roller's engine stopped to his utter amazement. There was no visible mechanical problem, and Joseph became confused and perplexed. He was in this state of confusion when a great voice "like the sound of many waters" called him three times. The voice was loud and clear and it told him that he would die if he refused to heed the divine call to go into the world and preach. Babalola did not want to listen to this voice and he responded like many of the Biblical prophets, who, when they were called out by Yahweh as prophets, did not normally yield to the first call. Men like Moses and Jeremiah submitted to God only when it became inevitable. So, Babalola gave in only after he had received the assurance of divine guidance. To go on the mission, he had to resign his appointment with the Public Works Department. Mr. Fergusson, the head of his unit, tried to dissuade him from resigning but the young man was bent on going on the Lord's mission.

The same voice came to Joseph a second time asking him to fast for seven days. He obeyed and at the end of the period he saw a great figure of a man who, according to Pastor Alokun, resembled Jesus. The man in a dazzling robe spoke at length about the mission he was to embark upon. The man also told him of the persecutions he would face and at the same time assured him of God's protection and victory. A hand prayer bell was given to Babalola as a symbol. He was told that the sound of the bell would always drive away evil spirits. He was also given a bottle of "life-giving water" to heal all manners of sickness. Consequently, wherever and whenever he prayed into water for therapeutic purposes, effective healing was procured for those who drank the water. Thus, Babalola became a prophet and a man with extraordinary powers. Enabled by the power of the Holy Spirit he could spend several weeks in prayer. Elder Abraham Owoyemi of Odo-Owa, said that the prophet regularly saw angels who delivered divine messages to him. An angel appeared in one of his prayers and forbade him to wear caps.

3.2. The Itinerary of Prophet Babalola

During one of his prayer sessions an angel appeared to him and gave him a big yam which he ordered him to eat. The angel told him that the yam was the tuber with which God fed the whole world. He further revealed that God had granted unto him the power to deliver those who were possessed of evil spirits in the world. He was directed to go first to Odo-Owa and start preaching. He was to arrive in the town on a market day, cover his body with palm fronds and disfigure himself with charcoal paints. In October 1928, he entered the town in the manner described and was taken for a mad man. Babalola immediately started preaching and prophesying. He told the inhabitants of Odo-Owa about an impending danger if they did not repent. He was arrested and taken to the district officer at Ilorin for allegedly disturbing the peace. The district officer later released him when the allegations could not be proven. However, it was said that a few days later, there was an outbreak of smallpox in the town. The man whose prophecies and messages were once rejected was quickly sought for. He went around praying for the victims and they were all healed.

Pa David Rotimi, Babalola's father, had been instrumental in the establishment of a C.M.S. Church in Odo-Owa. Babalola organized regular prayer meetings in this church which many people attended because of the miracles God performed through him. Among the regulars was Isaiah Oluyemi who later saw the wrath of Bishop Smith of Ilorin diocese . Information had reached the bishop that almost all members of the C.M.S. Church in Ilofa were seeing visions, speaking in tongues and praying vigorously. Babalola and the visionaries were allegedly ordered by Bishop Smith to leave the church. But Babalola did not leave the town until June 1930. On an invitation from Daniel Ajibola, Babalola went to Lagos. Elder Daniel Ajibola at that time was working in Ibadan where he was a member of the Faith Tabernacle Congregation. He introduced Prophet Babalola to Pastor D. O. Odubanjo, one of the leaders of the Faith Tabernacle in Lagos. Senior Pastor Esinsinade who was then the president of the Faith Tabernacle was invited to see Babalola. After listening to the details of his call and his ministry, the Faith Tabernacle leaders warmly received the young prophet into their midst.

Babalola had not yet been baptized by immersion and Senior Pastor Esinsinade emphasized that he needed to go through that rite. Pastor Esinsinade then baptized him in the lagoon at the back of the Faith Tabernacle Church building at 51, Moloney Bridge Street, Lagos. Babalola returned to Odo-Owa a few days after that and Elder (later Pastor) J. A. Medayese, paid him a visit. The news of the conversion of the new prophet reached Pastor K. P. Titus at Araromi in Yagba, present Kwara State. Pastor Titus was a teacher and preacher at the Sudan Interior Mission which was then thriving at Yagba. He invited Prophet Babalola for a revival service. Joseph Ayodele Babalola while in Yagba, performed mighty works of healing. Many Muslims and Christians from other denominations and some traditional religionists were converted to the new faith during the revival.

The fact that Babalola did not use the opportunity to establish a separate Christian organization despite his marvelous evangelical success, must be puzzling to historians, but his intention was not to start a new church. He declared to his followers that he had registered his membership with the Faith Tabernacle, the society which had him baptized in Lagos. He thus persuaded them to become members of the Faith Tabernacle. To facilitate this, he went to Lagos to confer with the leaders, especially as he was not yet well acquainted with the doctrines, tenets, and administration of the church.

3.3 Mighty Revivals

There was a controversy among the leaders of the Faith Tabernacle in Nigeria over some doctrines. In the midst of it were, in particular, the Ilesa and Oyan branches of the tabernacle. The Oyan branch was under the supervision of Pastor J. A. Babatope, a notable Anglican teacher, before his conversion and later, one of the outstanding leaders of the Faith Tabernacle in Nigeria. Issues like the use of western and traditional drugs versus divine healing, polygamy and whether polygamous husbands should be allowed to partake of the Lord's Supper were among those doctrines that needed to be agreed on. These issues had caused dissension at the Ilesa Tabernacle and in order to avoid a split, a delegation of peacemakers made up of all leading Faith Tabernacle pastors, was sent to Ilesa. It was headed by Pastor J. B. Esinsinade of Ijebu-Ode, president of the General Headquarters of the movement and D. O. Odubanjo of the Lagos Missionary Headquarters. The Ilesa meeting was scheduled for the 9th and 10th of July, 1930. The Apostolic Council of Jerusalem in A.D. 48, and other important church councils, is precedents in seeking ecclesiastical direction on matters affecting the life and peace of the church.

Before the delegation left Lagos for Ilesa, Babalola had been invited to meet the leaders at Pastor I. B. Akinyele's residence at Ibadan. From there I. B. Akinyele and Babalola joined the delegation to Ilesa. At Ilesa, he was introduced to the whole conference and was lodged in a separate room because of his prophetic mission. The representatives began their meeting and on the agenda were twenty-four items. The first was the validity of baptism administered to a man with many wives. The second was the issue of divine healing because some of the members believed in the use of drugs like quinine to cure malaria fever. They were only able to discuss the first item when there was a sudden interruption which Pastor Adegboyega described thus: "The conciliatory talks at Ilesa were going on, when suddenly a mighty sweeping revival broke out at Faith Tabernacle Congregation Church at Oke-Oye, Ilesa".

The revival began with the raising by Babalola of a dead child. The mother of the dead child who was restored to life went about spreading the news around the town of Ilesa proclaiming that a miracle working prophet had come to the town of Oke-Oye. This attracted a large number of people to Oke-Oye to see the prophet. According to Pastor Medayese, many of those afflicted with various diseases that came to Oke-Oye were healed. Many mighty works were performed through the use of the prayer bell and the drinking of consecrated water from a stream called Omi Ayo ("Stream of Joy"). The result was that thousands of people including traditional religionists, Muslims and Christians from various other denominations were converted to the Faith Tabernacle. As there was no space in the church hall, revival meetings were shifted to an open field where men and women from all walks of life, from every part of the country and from neighbouring countries assembled daily for healing, deliverances and blessings. Odubanjo testified that within three weeks Babalola had cured about one hundred lepers, sixty blind people and fifty lame persons.

He further claimed that both the Anglican and Wesleyan Churches in Ilesa were left desolate because their members transferred their allegiance to the revivalist and that all the patients in Wesley Hospital, Ilesa, abandoned their beds to seek healing from Babalola. Also: Many of the schools belonging to the Wesleyan and Anglican Churches, as well as to the Baptists and the Roman Catholics closed down altogether, and there has not been sufficient money again to pay their teachers due to the fact that the majority of their members left to join us".

The assistant district officer in Ilesa in 1930 wrote that he visited the scene of the revival incognito and found a crowd of hundreds of people including a large contingent of the lame and blind and concluded that the whole affair was orderly. Members of the church made fantastic claims such as: "Hopeless barren women were made fruitful; women who had been carrying their pregnancies for long years were wonderfully delivered. The dumb spoke and lunatics were cured. In fact, it was another day of Pentecost. Witches confessed and some demon possessed people were exorcized. But the general superintendent of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society of Nigeria at the time has described the reports as "grotesquely inaccurate accounts of the operations of Babalola." This of course could be the biased view of a man whose church was said to be the greatest victim of the Ilesa revival.

A revelation was later given to Ayo Babalola to burn down a big tree in front of the Owa's Palace. The big tree was traditionally believed to be the rendez-vous of witches and wizards. The juju tree was therefore greatly feared and sacrifices were usually made to the spirits believed to reside in it. There was apprehension that this bold act would result in the instantaneous death of Babalola since it was expected to arouse the anger of the gods. But to the great amazement of the people, the prophet did not die but rather continued to wax stronger in the Lord's work. That single event was said to have made even the Owa of Ilesa and important people in the town to fear and respect the prophet. The tidal wave of Babalola's revival spread from Ilesa to Ibadan, Ijebu, Lagos, Efon-Alaaye, Aramoko Ekiti and Abeokuta. No greater revival preceded that of Babalola. It was popularly held in Christ Apostolic Church (C.A.C.) circles that at one revival meeting, attendance rose to about forty thousand. \

Among the men of faith who came as disciples to Babalola were Daniel Orekoya, Peter Olatunji who came from Okeho, and Omotunde, popularly known as Aladura Omotunde, from Aramoko Ekiti. These men drew great inspiration from Babalola. Orekoya went on to reside in Ibadan where a great revival also broke out at Oke-Bola through him. It was during his Oke-Bola revival that Orekoya reportedly raised a dead pregnant woman

3.3.1 Babalola's Other Missionary Journeys

After the great revival of Oke-Oye, the prophet was directed by the Holy Spirit to go out on further missionary journeys, but even before this, people from other parts of the country had been spreading the glad tidings of Oke-Oye, Ilesa's great revival, to other parts of the country. Accompanied by some followers, Joseph Babalola went to Offa, in present Kwara State. Characteristically, people turned out to hear his preaching and see miracles. The Muslims in Offa became jealous and for that reason incited the members of the community against him. To avoid bloodshed he was compelled to leave. He next stopped in Usi in Ekitiland for his evangelical mission and he performed many works of healing. From Usi he and his men moved to Efon-Alaaye, also in Ekitiland, where they received a warm reception from the Oba Alaaye of Efon. An entire building was provided for their comfort.

Babalola requested an open space for prayer from the Oba who willingly and cheerfully gave him the privilege to choose a site. Consequently, the prophet and his men chose a large area at the outskirts of town. Traditionally the place was a forbidden forest because of the evil spirits that were believed to inhabit it. The Oba tried to dissuade Babalola and his men from entering the forbidden forest, but Babalola insisted on establishing his prayer ground there. The missionaries entered the bush, cleared it and consecrated it as a prayer ground. When no harm came upon them, the inhabitants of Efon were inspired to accept the new faith in large numbers. Babalola's evangelistic success in Efon-Alaaye was a remarkable one. Archdeacon H. Dallimore from Ado-Ekiti and some white pastors from Ogbomoso Baptist Seminary were believed to have come to see for themselves the "wonder-working prophet" at Efon. Both Dallimore and the Baptist pastors reportedly asked some men from St. Andrew's College, Oyo and Baptist Seminary, Ogbomosho to assist in the work.

The success of the revival was accelerated by the conversion of both the Oba of Efon and the Oba of Aramoko. They were both baptized with the names, Solomon Aladejare Agunsoye and Hezekiah Adeoye respectively. After this event, news of the revival at Efon spread to other parts of Ekitiland. The missionaries also visited other towns in the present Ondo State. Among them were Owo, Ikare and Oka. Babalola retreated to his home town in Odo-Owa to fortify himself spiritually. While he was at Odo-Owa, a warrant for his arrest was issued from Ilorin. He was arrested for preaching against witches, a practice which had caused some trouble in Otuo in present Bendel State. He was sentenced to jail for six months in Benin City in March 1932. After serving the jail term, he went back to Efon Alaaye.

One Mr. Cyprian E. Ufon came from Creek Town in Calabar to entreat Babalola to "come over to Macedonia and help." Ufon had heard about Babalola and his works and wanted him to preach in Creek Town. After seeking God's direction, the prophet followed Ufon to Creek Town. His campaign there was very successful. From Creek Town, Babalola visited Duke town and a plantation where a national church existed at the time. Certain members of this church received the gift of the Holy Spirit as Babalola was preaching to them and were baptized. When the prophet returned from the Calabar area, he settled down for a while. In 1935 he married Dorcas. The following year Babalola, accompanied by Evangelist Timothy Bababusuyi, went to the Gold Coast. On arrival at Accra, he was recognized by some people who had seen him at the Great Revival in Ilesa. After a successful campaign in the Gold Coast he returned to Nigeria.

3.4 The Birth of the C.A.C. in Nigeria

The spectacular evangelism by Prophet Joseph Ayo Babalola brought with it a wave of persecution to all who rushed into the new faith. The mission churches allegedly became jealous and hostile especially as their members constituted the main converts of the Faith Tabernacle. It was widely rumoured that the revival movement was a lawless and unruly organization. The Nigerian government was put on the alert about the activities of the movement. At this time, the leading members of the movement were advised to invite the American Faith Tabernacle leaders to come to their rescue. The leaders from America, however, refused to come as such a venture was said to be against their principles. As a matter of fact, the association between the Philadelphia group and the Faith Tabernacle of Nigeria was terminated following the marital problems of the leader of the American group, Pastor Clark. The Nigerian group then went into fellowship with the Faith and Truth Temple of Toronto which sent a party of seven missionaries to West Africa. Again, the fellowship was stopped when Mr. C. R. Myers, the only surviving missionary, sent his wife to the hospital where she died in childbirth.

Despite these disappointing relationships with foreign groups, the Nigerian Faith Tabernacle still considered it prestigious to seek affiliation with a foreign body. The rationale for this can be found in D. O Odubanjo's letter to Pastor D. P Williams of the Apostolic Church of Great Britain of March 1931. In the letter Odubanjo claimed: "The officers of the government here fear the European missionaries, and dare not trouble their native converts, but often, we brethren here have been ill-treated by government officers". This was followed by a formal request for missionaries to be sent to strengthen the position of the Nigerian Faith Tabernacle. Missionaries did come and, on their advice, the Nigerian Faith Tabernacle was ceded to the British Apostolic Church. Consequently, the name changed from Faith Tabernacle to the Apostolic Church. Doctrinal differences between the two groups soon began to appear in forms similar to the ones that caused the termination of the association with the American groups. The subject of divine healing was one of the most important issues.

Some of the invited white missionaries from Britain were found using quinine and other tablets and this caused a serious controversy among the leading members. It was unfortunate that the controversy could not be resolved and the movement subsequently split. One faction of the church made Oke-Oye its base and retained the name the Apostolic Church. The other larger faction and in which Prophet Joseph Babalola was a leader eventually became the Christ Apostolic Church. This church had to go through many names before May 1943 when its title was finally registered with number 147 under the Nigerian Company Law of 1924. Today, the church controls over five thousand assemblies, and reputedly is one of the most popular Christian organisations in Nigeria and the only indigenous organization with strong faith in divine healing.

Professor John Peel recorded that the membership of the C.A.C. in 1968 was well over one hundred thousand. That figure must have doubled by now. The church opened up several primary and grammar schools, a teachers' training college, a seminary, maternity homes and a training school for prophets. The years between 1970 and 1980 saw further expansion of the church to England, Ivory Coast, Sierra Leone and Liberia. At present the church has its Missionary and General Headquarters in Lagos and Ibadan respectively

Babalola was a spiritually gifted individual who was genuinely dissatisfied with the increasing materialistic and sinful existence into which he believed, the Yoruba in particular and Nigeria in general were being plunged as western civilization influence on society grew. The C.A.C. believes that the spiritual power bestowed on Babalola placed him on an equal level with Biblical apostles like Peter, Paul and others who were sent out with the authority and in the name of Jesus. Joseph Ayo Babalola slept in the Lord in 1959.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

As a young Christian, I once heard my pastor say during a morning service that Christians could raise the dead in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. I believed it with all my heart. And flying around on my bicycle in those days, I went through the city of Benin in search of a dead person to raise to life. After about five hours of hard searching I found a compound where a little girl had died a few hours before. The corpse had been cleaned and prepared for burial. I walked boldly up to the father of the dead child. "The God whom I serve can bring your baby back to life," I told him. "Will you permit me to pray for the child and bring her back to life?" The man was startled, but he agreed. With great enthusiasm, I walked into the room and up to the bed. The child was cold and dead. With strong faith in the Lord, I called on the Lord to restore the child back to life. I turned to the corpse and called it by name, "Arise in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ." Oh Glory to God! The corpse sneezed, heavily, alas. The child had come back to life! This is the story of Benson Idahosa

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you should be able to:

- Derive inspiration from the life and conversion of Bishop Benson Idahosa
- Explain the various view points about Bishop Benson Idahosa
- Highlight Bishop Benson Idahosa's contribution to the spread of Christianity in Africa

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 His Early LIFE

Benson Andrew Idahosa was born of poor pagan parents in Benin City on September 11, 1938 in a village called Ewasso Edo, in Edo state, Nigeria. He was a sickly infant who was always fainting. As a result of his constant illness his father ordered the mother to throw him in the dust bin. When he was eighteen months old he was left on a rubbish heap to die. He was rejected by his father, sent to work on a farm as a servant and was denied education until he was fourteen years old. His education was irregular due to the poor financial status of his parents. He later took correspondence courses from Britain and the United States while working in Bata Shoe Company.

3.1.1 His Conversion and Call to the Ministry

His conversion was dramatic and his calling supernatural. He was converted by Pastor Okpo on a football field one Sunday afternoon while playing soccer with his teammates. Thus, young Benson became the first indigenous member of Pastor Okpo's small congregation. As a young convert he became very zealous in winning souls and in conducting outreaches in villages around Benin City. He was called to the ministry in a night vision from the Lord. "I have called you that you might take the gospel around the world in my name, preach the gospel, and I will confirm my word with signs following," said the voice from heaven.

The room was filled with the presence of God as Benson fell to his knees beside the bed: "Lord, wherever you want me to go, I will go." He preyed on through the night, renewing his vows to God and interceding for his people who were yet to hear the message of salvation. After his call, Benson launched into ministry work preaching from village to village the gospel of Jesus Christ with great power and anointing. More people confessed Christ as their Saviour, and more healings occurred as he prayed for the sick.

3.2 Expansion of His Ministry

Soul winning was Idahosa's primary concern. With a motto "Evangelism our Supreme Task," he worked towards this goal of reaching the unreached in Nigeria, Africa and the rest of the world with the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. As a black African, he found the doors of African countries were wide open and he ministered in over 123 countries all over the world. Crusades played a major role in his ministry. He was involved in at least one crusade per month. A record crowd of nearly one million people a night attended his Lagos Crusade in April 1985. He established the Redemption Television Ministry with a potential viewing audience of 50 million people. Idahosa operated in faith and he had a robust faith. He believed and trusted God with a childlike faith. He once said that living a daily life of absolute faith in God is the only secret to great success. He believed God for everything.

All things are possible to him that believes. He spent quality time in prayer and in the study of God's Word. He said that if someone spends time studying the Bible and acting on it, people will come looking for that person for life solutions. Idahosa also spent time studying the works and lives of other successful people both in the gospel ministry and other fields of human endeavors and he applied the principles he learned about these successful people to his life and ministry. He was very energetic and hardworking. One of the ministers who served under him said that he had never seen a person who worked as hard as Archbishop Benson Idahosa. He was committed and consistent and he had confidence in himself. He was very humble and full of godly wisdom.

Benson Idahosa, the archbishop and founder of Church of God Mission International Incorporated with its headquarters in Benin City, Nigeria established over 6,000 churches throughout Nigeria and Ghana before 1971. Many of the ministers he supervised pastored churches of 1,000 to 4,000 people. His desire to meet the needs of the total man led him to establish several other arms of the ministry apart from the church. They include the Faith Mediplex, All Nations for Christ Bible Institute, Word of Faith Group of Schools and Benson Idahosa University which is currently under the leadership of his son, Rev. F.E.B. Idahosa. His wife, Margaret Idahosa is the current presiding bishop of the church.

The headquarters of his ministry, Faith Miracle Center, is a cathedral that seats up to 10,000 people. Church of God Mission has branches the world over, from the United Kingdom to South Africa to Japan to America. With his main task being evangelism, he launched Idahosa World Outreach television ministry (IWO TV), which was a broadcast reaching a potential viewing audience of 50 million people ⁽³⁾.

3.3 What Leading Gospel Ministers Said about Benson Idahosa

According to Mrs. Gordon Freda Lindsay, president of Christ for the Nations Inc., Dallas, Texas, U.S.A.:

I know of no young black person in all of Africa who is reaching millions as Benson is,--in crusades with hundreds of thousands in attendance, in his weekly nationwide telecast, in his Bible School, training eager students from several nations. He also conducts campaigns in Sweden, Singapore, Malaysia, Korea, Australia and the United States, where he often appeared on national religious telecasts. His burden for souls, his ministry of healing and miracles, even to the raising of several dead, demonstrates he is especially called of the Lord in these end times.

Benson Idahosa is sought after by everyone in his state, from government officials to beggars. When they posed questions and explained their problems to this man they received instantanous miracle solutions, just as people did in Bible days with God's prophets. And the people get miraculous answers from this mighty leader of God's people. Benin City respects and salutes this great man of God, even at death. I have been with him on visits to many officials, to the governor, to the powerful Benin tribal kings. He moved with God and his people know it. His great miracle cathedral (his headquarters) seats over 10,000 (1981). His Bible School attracts upper class people from different African nations. And they also come from Maurice, India, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, Bangladesh, Indonesia, Singapore, Philippines, Hong Kong, Japan, Korea, the Middle East, Europe and other nations of the world--a truly International Bible Training Centre of dynamic faith.

People know that Bishop Idahosa preached what he practiced. Dr. Idahosa's evangelistic ministry has reached nations around the world. He was the first black African evangelist to shake Australia in a massive crusade that got national attention. His seminars have affected Christians and church leaders in many countries. I sincerely salute this man because he practiced among his own people what he preached to the world. Benson Idahosa was a man who believed God's promises and that God's miracle provision applies to Africans as well as to Americans. He believed that Africa has a part in God's work, and Africa will reap God's blessings. Evangelist T. L. Osborn, from

Many who follow Idahosa's teaching have been saved from poverty and have learned to plant out of their desperate need and to look to God as their divine source thereby becoming prosperous Christians in their own land. Idahosa rose from the rank of an ordinary man to world leadership as a pastor, builder, counsellor, prophet, teacher, apostle, evangelist,--a man of godly wisdom and of Christ-like compassion, whose ministry has blessed millions the world over. Idahosa was the greatest African ambassador of the apostolic Christian faith to the world. He had strong links with international gospel ministers like Billy Graham, T.L. Osborn, Kenneth Hagin, Benny Hinn, Reinhard Bonnke, Morris Cerullo, Oral Roberts, amongst others; and took the gospel to 143 nations in his lifetime ⁽¹⁾. At the time of his death in 1998, he was reputed as having preached to more whites than any black man, and to more blacks than any white man.

3.3.1 Achievements

- In 1971, he earned a diploma in Divinity from Christ for the Nations Institute in Dallas, Texas.
- In 1981, he earned a Doctorate of Divinity from the Word of Faith College in New Orleans.
- In 1984, he earned a Doctorate in Law at the Oral Roberts University.
- He was the founding president of the Pentecostal Fellowship of Nigeria (PFN)
- He was a member of the College of Bishops of the International Communion of Christian Churches.
- He was once the President of All Nations for Christ Bible Institute.
- In addition to filling the position of archbishop of Church of God Mission, he was also president of All Nations for Christ Bible Institute, president of Idahosa World Outreach and president of Faith Medical Centre. He held positions in numerous organizations including the college of bishops of the international communion of Christian churches and the Oral Roberts University in Oklahoma.

He also received other degrees from the International University in Brussels, Belgium.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Discuss Bishop Benson Idahosa's contribution to the spread of Christianity

4.0 CONCLUSION

Archbishop Benson Idahosa and his wife Margaret Idahosa were blessed with four children. Archbishop Benson Idahosa was said to be the leader of over seven million Jesus people worldwide before he went to be with the Lord in February 1998. Known for his boldness, power and prosperity-based preaching, as well as an enormous faith in the supernatural, he was instrumental to the strong wave of revival in Christianity and marked conversions from animism that occurred between the 1970s and 1990s in Nigeria. He is reported to have performed so many miracles, including healing the blind, and raising up to twenty-eight people from the dead at different times in his ministry.

He was known for many notable quotes including "my God is not a poor God", "your attitude determines your altitude", "it is more risky, not to take a risk", "I am a possibilitarian", "If your faith says yes, God cannot say no", amongst others. Many of his messages on faith, miracles and prosperity remain a classic among Pentecostals. He is regarded by Christian's foes as the father of Pentecostalism in Nigeria, and was the founding President of the Pentecostal Fellowship of Nigeria (PFN). Many prominent Nigerian pastors like Ayo Oritsejafor (Current PFN President), David Oyedepo, Felix Omobude, Fred Addo and Chris Oyakhilome were his proteges.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

In 2006 Akinola appeared on TIME magazine's list of the world's 100 most influential people in the category Leaders and Revolutionaries. However, in 2007 TIME magazine suggests that he "has some explaining to do" in relation to his support for legislation criminalising "gay... organizations" and "Publicity, procession and public show of same-sex amorous relationship through the electronic or print media physically, directly, indirectly or otherwise". In 2007, the Nigerian newspaper ThisDay gave him together with 17 others a Lifetime Achievement Award, stating in its citation: "Called a bigot by some in the Anglican Church, his attitudes nonetheless represent a deep-rooted conservative tradition in African Christianity that is flourishing and growing. But he has been criticised by other sections of the international press, including the right-leaning Daily Telegraph which in an editorial on 23 March 2007 characterised him as one of the "extremists" who had "hijacked" conservative Anglicanism, and as "a deeply divisive figure" who has "defended new Nigerian legislation that makes "cancerous" (his word) same-sex activity punishable by up to five years' imprisonment.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you should be able to:

- Discuss Peter Akinola's contribution to the growth of the Christianity
- Explain Peter Akinola's position on the issue of homosexual debate
- Identify Peter Akinola's achievements and failures

3.1 EARLY LIFE

Peter Akinola was born in 1944 to a Yoruba family in Abeokuta in southwestern Nigeria. Akinola was four years old when his father died, and he was sent to live with an uncle. He attended school from the ages of 10 to 16; his uncle then told him to leave school and learn a trade. After an apprenticeship in Lagos, Akinola became a successful furniture maker and patent-medicine seller, but he gave up the business to study for the priesthood. He was ordained a deacon in 1978 and a priest in 1979; he traveled to the United States, graduating in 1981 from the Virginia Theological Seminary with a master's degree. Upon his return to Nigeria, he served in the Abuja diocese, being consecrated as bishop in 1989. In 1998 he became archbishop in Islam-dominated northern Nigeria, and in 2000 he was elected primate of all Nigeria. He studied at a Nigerian Anglican seminary and was ordained to the priesthood in the Anglican Church of Nigeria. Soon after ordination, he pursued further study at the Virginia Theological Seminary.

Returning to Nigeria at the beginning of the 1980s, Akinola was assigned to create an Anglican presence in the new capital Abuja which was about to be built. He holds it one of his greatest successes to have created out of nothing a vibrant Anglican community there. In 1989 he was ordained bishop of Abuja and 1997 archbishop of Province III of the Church of Nigeria, consisting of the northern dioceses of Nigeria. On February 22, 2000 he was elected primate of the Church of Nigeria, the second biggest church in the Anglican Communion, then numbering 18 million members. Peter Akinola is married and a father of six.

3.1.1 Akinola's Contribution to the Church of Nigeria (Anglican Communion)

One of his first actions as primate was to get together 400 bishops, priests, lay members, and members of the Mothers' Union to elaborate a vision for the Church of Nigeria under chairman Ernest Shonekan, a former president of Nigeria. The vision elaborated was:

"The Church of Nigeria (Anglican Communion) shall be; bible-based, spiritually dynamic, united, disciplined, self supporting, committed to pragmatic evangelism, social welfare and a Church that epitomizes the genuine love of Christ."

Part of the program of actions were, e.g.

- on central level
 - translating the books of liturgy in further languages
 - establishing a group of 3000 leading lay personalities who will take care of fundraising and relieve the bishops of this duty
 - establish a legal support team to enforce the constitutional right of freedom of religion and worship
 - establish colleges for theology and universities

- provide internet access for the dioceses
- for each diocese
 - training fulltime itinerant evangelists
 - on the job training for priests and their wives
 - working out a social welfare program for less privileged people
 - establish a hospital with at least 30 beds
 - establish secondary schools
- on community level
 - literacy courses for adults
 - set up cottage industries for the unemployed
- In October 2009, he reacted to the Vatican's proposed creation of personal ordinariates for disaffected traditionalist Anglicans by saying that although he welcomed ecumenical dialogue and shared moral theology with the Catholic Church, the current GAFCON structures already meet the spiritual and pastoral needs of conservative Anglicans in Africa.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

What personal lessons can we learn from the humble beginning of Bishop Akinola

3.2. Bishop Akinola's contribution to the homosexual debate

In August 2003 he stated that if the celibate homosexual Jeffrey John was consecrated as Bishop of Reading or the non-celibate homosexual Gene Robinson consecrated as Bishop of New Hampshire, the Church of Nigeria would leave the Anglican Communion. A number of dioceses throughout the world, including the Diocese of Sydney, made similar statements. Under pressure from the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. John withdrew from appointment as bishop and was subsequently appointed as Dean of St Albans. Gene Robinson's consecration went forward, precipitating a crisis in the Anglican Communion. At the end of 2003 Akinola commissioned together with Drexel Gomez, primate of the Church in the Province of the West Indies and Gregory Venables, Presiding Bishop of the Anglican Church of the Southern Cone Claiming our Anglican Identity: The Case Against the Episcopal Church, USA, a paper for the Primates of the Anglican Communion detailing the implications of the consecration of Gene Robinson for the Anglican Communion, in the view of conservative Primates.

His first reaction on the Windsor Report 2004 was outspoken and critical, but the statement from the Primates gathered at the first African Anglican Bishops Conference, headed by Akinola, was more moderate and expressed commitment to the future of the Anglican Communion. However, whilst strenuously supporting those parts of the Windsor Report which address the gay issue, he has not followed with those parts that deplore overseas interventions in the U.S. Church and has, on the contrary, set up a missionary body, the Convocation of Anglicans in North America, in order to formalise the ties between break-away Anglicans in the U.S. and the Church of Nigeria.

In September 2005, Bishop Akinola spoke out against the Church in Brazil deposition of an Evangelical bishop and excommunication of over 30 priests. On November 12, 2005, Akinola signed a Covenant of Concordat with the Presiding Bishop's of the Reformed Episcopal Church and the Anglican Province of America. Akinola refused to take Holy Communion in company with the Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church, both at the Primates Meeting at Dromantine in 2005 and at the Primates Meeting at Dar-es-Salaam in 2007 and, on the latter occasion, he issued a press release in order to publicise and explain his refusal and that of others associated with him

Akinola's name as chairman of the Global South Primates heads the list of signatories to a letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury on November 15, 2005. In this letter Europe is described as "a spiritual desert" and the actions of the Church of England in supporting the new civil partnerships laws are said to give "the appearance of evil". Three of the bishops whose names appeared on the document at the Global South website (President Bishop Clive Handford of Jerusalem and the Middle East, the Primate of the West Indies Archbishop Drexel Gomez, and the Presiding Bishop of the Southern Cone Bishop Gregory Venables) denied signing or approving the letter, and criticised it as "an act of impatience", "scandalous", and "megaphone diplomacy

Akinola was among the Global South leaders who opposed the consecration of Gene Robinson, the first openly homosexual bishop in the Anglican Communion. This group successfully pressed for the voluntary withdrawal of ECUSA's representatives from the Anglican Consultative Council's meeting in Nottingham in 2005, although representatives did attend in order to make a presentation supporting full inclusion of gays and lesbians in the life of the Church, for which a vote of thanks was passed. In August 2005 he denounced a statement of the Church of England's House of Bishops on civil partnerships and called for the disciplining of the Church of England and ECUSA on the grounds that the Church has not changed its position on same-sex partnerships. Since the Anglican Communion has historically been defined as those Churches in communion with the Sea of Canterbury, whose Archbishop is head of the Church of England and thus primus inter pares in the Anglican Communion, this led to speculation that Akinola was positioning himself as a possible international leader of a more conservative church than the present Anglican Communion, which would no longer recognise the authority or primacy of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

However, he attended the subsequent Primates Meeting in Tanzania in 2007, although he absented himself from all the celebrations of Holy Communion during that meeting. In May 2007 he flew to the USA to install Martyn Minns, a priest who had left the Episcopal Church of the USA, as a bishop of the Church of Nigeria. Akinola reportedly ignored requests not to do this from both the Presiding Bishop and the Archbishop of Canterbury. However, the timing of the requests and their intent, relative to Akinola's departure from Nigeria is a subject of contention. The newly installed bishop indicated at a press conference that the intention was to replace the Episcopal Church of the USA (as an organ of the Anglican Communion) with a structure formed under auspices of the Church of Nigeria.

Bishop Akinola is one of the principal founders of the Global Anglican Future Conference[6], an international gathering of conservative Anglican bishops planned for June 2008, and has declared that the Church of Nigeria is in full communion with the emergent Anglican Church in North America, which was founded to create a separate ecclesiastical structure to the Episcopal Church of the United States within the Anglican Communion.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

What lesson's can we derive from Bishop Akinola's stands on the issue of Homosexuality?

3.3 Akinola's contribution to National Issues

In September 2006, the Standing Committee of the Church of Nigeria, headed by Akinola, issued a Message to the Nation, taking up ten political controversies in Nigeria, among them a bill regarding same-sex relationships: "The Church commends the law-makers for their prompt reaction to outlaw same-sex relationships in Nigeria and calls for the bill to be passed since the idea expressed in the bill is the moral position of Nigerians regarding human sexuality." The bill in question, as well as criminalising same-sex marriage, also proposed to criminalise "Registration of Gay Clubs, Societies and organizations" and "Publicity, procession and public show of same-sex amorous relationship through the electronic or print media physically, directly, indirectly or otherwise", on penalty of up to 5 years of imprisonment. The proposed legislation was formally challenged by the United States State Department as a breach of Nigeria's obligations under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Some western supporters justify the legislation on the basis that it does not support the stoning to death of homosexuals under the Sharia code.

3.3.1 Reaction to Muslim cartoon riots

In February 2006, Muslims rioting over the Danish newspaper cartoon controversy spread to Nigeria. Rioters targeted Christians and their property, resulting in a reported 43 deaths, 30 burned churches and 250 destroyed shops and houses. Included among the victims was the family of one of Akinola's bishops, Ben Kwashi, the Bishop of Jos. Kwashi's home was broken into and his wife was tortured and sexually assaulted, resulting in her temporary blindness. The rioters also severely beat Kwashi's teenage son. (Kwashi was out of the country in the United Kingdom at the time of the attack.) In response to the rioting, Akinola issued a statement in his capacity as President of the Christian Association of Nigeria: "May we at this stage remind our Muslim brothers that they do not have the monopoly of violence in this nation." Some criticized this statement as inciting Christian counter-riots against Muslim targets in Nigeria.

For example, Christian mobs in Onitsha retaliated against Muslims, killing 80 persons, , burned a Muslim district with 100 homes, defaced mosques and burned the corpses of those they had killed in the streets, forcing hundreds of Muslims to flee the city. American evangelical leader Rick Warren, however, wrote that Akinola's angry response "was no more characteristic than Nelson Mandela's apartheid-era statement that 'sooner or later this violence is going to spread to whites.'" The phrase "monopoly on violence" is most characteristically associated with describing how, in modern states, acts of enforcement are controlled by the government in "the monopoly of the legitimate use of violence in the enforcement of its order" (Max Weber) and does not rely upon vigilantism or private security which is not legitimated by the state.

3.3.2 His Achievements

Akinola was given the National Award of Commander of the Order of the Niger (CON) in December 2003. Akinola was at one time President of the Christian Association of Nigeria, an ecumenical body bringing together 52 million Protestant, Catholic, and African independent Christians. During his Presidency, the National Ecumenical Centre in Abuja was completed, which had been a building ruin for 16 years. In November 2009, Akinola signed an ecumenical statement known as the Manhattan Declaration calling on evangelicals, Catholics and Orthodox not to comply with rules and laws permitting abortion, same-sex marriage and other matters that go against their religious consciences.

3.3.3 His failures

Akinola was voted out of his position as National President of the Christian Association of Nigeria (CAN) in June 2007, and replaced by the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Nigeria, who polled 72 votes to Akinola's 33 vote This followed criticism of Akinola's allegedly high handed leadership style and of his alleged failure to confront Nigerian President Obasanjo as other Christian leaders had.^[13] Subsequently, his candidacy as

Vice President was rejected by the General Assembly of the Christian Association of Nigeria

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Discuss Bishop Akinola's contribution to the growth of Christianity in Nigeria

4.0 CONCLUSION

In September 2005, the Church of Nigeria redefined in its constitution its relationship to the Anglican Communion as "Communion with all Anglican Churches, Dioceses and Provinces that hold and maintain the Historic Faith, Doctrine, Sacrament and Discipline of the one Holy, Catholic, and Apostolic Church. In a later press release, Akinola clarified "We want to state that our intention in amending the 2002 Constitution of the Church of Nigeria was to make clear that we are committed to the historic faith once delivered to the Saints, practice and the traditional formularies of the Church. ... We treasure our place within the worldwide family of the Anglican Communion but we are distressed by the unilateral actions of those provinces that are clearly determined to redefine what our common faith was once. We have chosen not to be yoked to them as we prefer to exercise our freedom to remain faithful. We continue to pray, however, that there will be a genuine demonstration of repentance.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

Pastor kumuyi attributes the growth of the church which is over one million members in 60 countries worldwide to the kind of teaching the people get. He said we teach the Bible in such a way that practical problems are solved - family problems, professional challenges, and also how people should be outward looking. For example, part of the teaching is motivational, to let our members know that they have potentials, that they can achieve, that they can depend on God. We develop the faith of the people and because of that, they value themselves. We don't have the idea of "I am the never-do-well person". No. We are humble, yes; but in the Lord we can be who he says we can be.

Also when they get sick, we pray and they get healed. This manifestation of the power of God coupled with the other things has contributed to the growth of the Church. We also have a proper organisation and administration. We have, for example, the Children's Section, the Youth Section, the Campus Fellowship, the Women's Section, Professionals and all that. We also organise many programmes that actually make people to know God and eventually become part of the Church.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 EARLY LIFE

Williams Folorunso Kumuyi was born on the 6th of June 1941 at Erin Ijesha, Osun State into an Anglican Home. His parents were Mr Gabriel Kumuyi Akinfenwa and Mrs Comfort Kumuyi. Kumuyi was his father's real name and Akinfenwa was his family name. But his father made him change his surname to kumuyi when he got to school. His father died in 1967, the same year he completed his first degree at the University of Ibadan. His mother died in the 1990s at the age of 85. William Kumuyi believed his names are very significant. According to him the full name is Ikumuyiwa, which means 'death brought this'. After I became a Christian, I realised it was the death of Christ that has brought us salvation, and also the redemption and reconciliation we have with God. So, for me, the name, Ikumuyiwa, is very significant - death has brought something good.

The death of Christ has brought us the grace and goodness of God, and the relationship we have now with the Lord. Yes. My first name, William, means "defender of the faith", and my middle name, Folorunso, puts me in the hands of God, it means "God watches over this one". And when you think of the gospel being really death of Christ bringing redemption, it means that death has brought us blessings. And now, by my first name William, I am a "defender of the faith. And while I am defending the faith, God will keep watching over me. Pastor Kumuyi grew up in a very strict Christian home, he told Isaacson, "We would get up in the morning, read the Bible, sing hymns, and go to church regularly. When I went to secondary school I lost interest in the church because our principal taught us atheism. He completed his secondary school education in 1961, and started teaching mathematics at Mayflower in 1962. But after a while I thought again and started going to various churches in town.

Eventually, in 1963, a group of singers and preachers from a Gospel church got permission to come to the school. It was there that he was introduced to the Apostolic Faith, not Apostolic Church, and really heard about the change that Christ could make to his life when he turns from sin and believe that Jesus died for him on the cross of Calvary. I understood the Gospel message, and was born again on April 5th, 1964. I read John Wesley, Charles Finney, Spurgeon, and lots of other books. I got involved with the Scripture Union, and I grew."

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Discuss practical lessons you have learnt from the early life of W.F Kumuyi that will help your ministry

3.2 Call to Ministry

He gained a first-class degree in Mathematics at the University of Ibadan; then went back to Mayflower School to teach. After five years he went to the University of Lagos to do a Postgraduate Certificate in Education and became a lecturer there. In 1973, while serving as Math Lecturer at The University of Lagos, W.F. Kumuyi started a Bible study group in his flat at the University of Lagos with 15 university students who had come to him requesting training in the Scriptures. By the early 1980's that small group had grown to several thousand, at which time Deeper Life Bible Church was formally established. According to Pastor kumuyi the style of teaching was a very important factor, at the time it was new to a lot of people - to go systematically from verse to verse and pinpoint practical lessons applied to their lives, and their lives were really changing - people became born again, their lives were transformed, families got better united. And members of the group began to spread the message of how they enjoyed studying the Bible. Through this voluntary spiritual salesmanship, a lot more people came to the Bible studies.

We also started sending out Christian articles, we called them "Deeper Christian Life Articles". Those who received them re-sent them to their friends, and so the message spread, and more people came. Contrary to what we see today where anybody who can read the Bible thinks they are qualified to start a Church, Pastor Kumuyi resisted early pressure to establish your Church, even after 45,000 people had attended his retreat in 1981. According to him I needed a clear call from the Lord before doing what other people were urging us to do. You see, it is not just that you are able to do something. There were a lot of things we were capable of doing, but we needed to wait on the Lord to see what was fit for us to do. You get more satisfaction and fulfillment when you wait on the Lord. That was the reason why I had to get a very definite directive from Him as to what to do. And, of course, what we see today actually justify the waiting.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Describe the emergence of Deeper Life Bible Church

3.3 The growth of Deeper Christian Life Ministry

Pastor Kumuyi's own Christian life developed because he took the Bible so seriously, and so the Deeper Christian Life Ministry has developed in the same way. In Alan Isaacson's own words, he "preached Deeper Life into existence." His sermons were captivating, wrote Isaacson, "I would classify him as one of the greatest living preachers, giving a straightforward Bible-based message, his sermons thorough, and always personally challenging. He always gave a wide range of cross-references which were read in their context, supporting, clarifying and expanding his main points. He spoke clearly and authoritatively to the Nigerian situation. He dealt sensitively with African culture, but also made a firm stand in highlighting the points where local culture was incompatible with the will of God. While stressing the high moral tone which is one of the virtues of most African cultures at their best, he was at pains to specify those aspects of local culture which were unchristian and even evil. In this way he was not only concerned with some kind of personal holiness, but also genuinely seeking the wholeness and harmony of the community at large, where truth, honesty, and justice should be the predominant characteristics.

The church also stands firm on the teaching of holiness and living a practical Christian life. The teaching on holiness and exhortation of all members to live holy lives takes precedence over all other teachings of the church. The Deeper Life Bible Church is well known in Nigeria and other countries where its presence is established all over the world for its strict adherence to the teachings of Christ, His apostles and obedience to the word of God. The General Superintendent (simply referred to as) Pastor Kumuyi almost always during all his preachings exhort members and new comers alike to be born again so as to be qualified for the kingdom of heaven. By 1988 the congregation had grown to 50,000, and now numbers 120,000 members, making it the third largest Christian church in the world. Dr. Johan Combrinck reports that the Deeper Life Bible Church not only has an attendance of 120,000 every Sunday, but has planted 500 churches in Lagos, 5,000 in the rest of Nigeria (with an independent estimate of more than 800,000 members in Nigeria alone), and 3,000 elsewhere (with missionaries to 40 countries of Africa) as the movement missionary contribution. (Source: AFNET).

As the DCLM blossomed throughout Africa it also extended its missionary exploits to Western Europe, Russia, Asia, India and North America. Dr. C. Peter Wagner, in an article titled 'Those Amazing Post-Denominational Churches' wrote: "By far, the most rapidly growing segment of Christianity on all six continents is a type of church that does not fit traditional categories or classifications. Missiologists have recognized its presence for some time, but it is such a recent phenomenon that they have not yet agreed on a name for it. Perhaps one title that would fit is the term 'post-denominational. Go to almost any metropolitan area and ask to visit the largest Christian Church. Chances are it will be one of these new post-denominational churches'. In Lagos, Nigeria, it would be the Deeper Life Bible Church, pastored by William Kumuyi. On a recent Sunday I saw 74,000 adults worshipping together, with 40,000 children meeting in a separate building across the street.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

What was the secret of the growth of deeper life Bible Church?

3.4 A Man with a Great Heart for God

He is not tall, and does not have a larger-than-life character. He does not dominate, nor has he accrued power to himself. He walks slowly, is relaxed, and has a gentle sense of humour with a warm smile and a twinkle in his eyes. He dresses simply, eats simply... and could have assumed titles to himself. As the Deeper Christian Life Ministry developed - most people enjoy the trappings and regalia of status which followers gladly give. But he calls his followers brothers and sisters, and treats them as colleagues. In speaking to a group of Pastors under his leadership as General Superintendent, W. F. Kumuyi said: "Our emphasis should be on the practical side of going out. If the Lord comes, let him meet us working for him. Now every time I preach I try to mention evangelism. I have told all the Lagos District Coordinators and Zonal Leaders to spend half their time on evangelism and only half their time on their members. There will always be problems in the church: don't let them take up all your time".

Concluding his book, Isaacson writes, "And, of course, Deeper Life are self-governing. Kumuyi is the founder & General Superintendent, and he carries a tremendous weight in pastoring the Gbagada (Lagos) church alone, quite apart from the (now thousands) of other congregations across Nigeria and the rest of the world. He is a remarkable leader, one of God's people for this generation. Kumuyi has received a great deal from God, but he is adept at passing along what he receives. My feeling is that what God has given his people through Kumuyi will be kept and developed long after Kumuyi is gone. This has been God's work, and to Him be the glory." Journalist Alan Isaacson talking with many members of the church was told how Christ has miraculously intervened and changed lives in response to prayer and the proclamation of the Gospel.

In Pastor Kumuyi's own words: "God, in the growth of Deeper Life Bible Church, has strategically and prudently used miracles to 'make all men come to Him' (John 3:26).

We take Christian living and holiness seriously." DLBC's website maintains a set of "testimonials," from people, which claim supernatural healings that have occurred as a result of prayers being offered by Pastor Kumuyi. These claims include the reversal of paralysis, spontaneous growth of limbs, spontaneous disappearance of mental diseases, and other such testimonies.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Enumerate the qualities of that make Kumuyi a great Man of God

4.0 CONCLUSION

According to Isaacson, "The history of Deeper Life is very much the personal story of W.F. Kumuyi. He is a gifted man, clear-thinking and humble. He is a dedicated Christian and deserves the title 'the man of God,' which his followers have given him. Since he was a young man, Kumuyi has devoted his time to reading and studying the Bible. He knows the Scriptures inside out, and has struggled to understand and apply them. As he struggled to share his love for the word of God, many people have been drawn to him for advice, or simply to listen. When he preaches, his message is clear, simple, and profound. Poor street traders who can barely read sit next to university professors, all equally captivated by the way Scripture becomes suddenly relevant to them.

1.0 Introduction

Before joining the pentecostal church Adeboye was a mathematics lecturer, and worked at the universities of Lagos and Ilorin; He has a PhD in applied mathematics from the University of Lagos, hitting a successful career in the academic world. After he joined The Redeemed Christian Church Of God he began working to translate the sermons of its then Pastor and founder, Rev. Josiah Olufemi Akindayomi, from Yoruba into English. In 1981 by Divine Providence Adeboye became the General Overseer of the Redeemed Christian Church Of God, making him leader of the Church after the death of Papa Akindayomi the previous year.

For three years he filled the role part-time, still lecturing at Ilorin, until giving up his university position to preach full-time The Church, which was not well known before Adeboye took charge, now claims branches in over a hundred countries, including more than 14,000 in Nigeria. Adeboye has stated that his aim is to put a church within five minutes of every person on Earth. In 2008 Newsweek magazine named Adeboye one of the fifty most powerful people in the world. He is married to Foluke Adeboye, also a pastor, with whom he has children.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you should be able to:

- Draw Inspiration from the early life of Enoch Adeboye
- Explain the various qualities of a great Man of God
- Discuss Adeboye's contribution to the spread of the gospel

3.1 EARLY LIFE

His mother had “retired” from bearing children. With daughters and a son, the junior wife of the senior Adeboye felt she had had enough. Then tragedy struck. Her only son died. Relatives and neighbours – especially siblings of the dead son – appealed to the Ilesa-born petty trader to try and have one more issue. Who knows, it might be a replacement for the son that is gone. Their prediction proved true and on March 2, 1942, the earth welcomed a son who was destined to be a world changer of no mean stature, Enoch Adejare Adeboye. Growing up a peasant farmer's son in the village was one thing. Attending what was then an elitist post-primary education facility was quite another kettle of fish. By the time Enoch Adeboye entered Ilesa Grammar School in 1956, the sharp difference between his socio-economic status and that of his mates was glaring.

Dr. Omole recollected, “there was a day we students decided to boycott the dining hall to protest against the pap and akara we were being served. The only student who went quietly to the dining hall to take his meal was Pastor Adeboye. I am sure it was not because he was so desperately hungry. Yes, he would have had difficulty purchasing what to eat. But at the same time, I think it had more to do with his loyalty to the principal, Rev. Canon Akinyemi who was his benefactor. Disadvantaged background and strict upbringing bring out different qualities in different children. No doubt, the combination of the two had done well for the man his followers love to call Daddy GO. Rose by a disciplinarian father and a hard working poor mother, Adeboye picked up the qualities that would make him what he is today quite early in life. His relationship with late Rev. Canon Akinyemi, father of Professor Boloji Akinyemi is a pointer to his later development.

3.2 QUALITIES OF A GREAT MAN OF GOD

There are several special qualities in the life of Adeboye, which enabled him to fulfill the call of God on his life. Some of these qualities are as follows:

3.2.1 Great dreamer

When I was young, Pastor Adeboye told the crowd that had gathered to spend “a day with the GO” at the MUSON Centre at Onikan, Lagos in 1998, “a bishop visited our village. Schools were closed. Hunters lined the road firing dane guns into the air. Cocks and eggs were gathered as presents for him. I took a look at the pomp and pageantry and said to myself, ‘One day I will be a bishop. If anyone takes his PhD in mathematics as an indicator of the fact that Pastor E. A. Adeboye is a clinical practical man who does not allow dreams into his realm of operation, such a person cannot be far from the truth. Abacha for life campaign was on. A million-man march was organised for Abuja.

Half way across the globe, Pastor Adeboye was travelling in the company of two of his faithful followers in Miami, USA. There they saw a large number of people gathered at the beach for a musical festival. Why can’t we have a two-million-man gathering for Jesus?” That was the dream Adeboye’s mind produced out of the two events. The result? Lekki ’98 the first Holy Ghost Festival that up to that time was arguably the largest religious gathering in Nigeria if not Africa as a whole. The gathering now holds annually at the Redemption City and its tag has become Holy Ghost Congress. The most astounding aspect is its purpose. Adeboye believes that through the means of his annual congress, Nigeria will become the greatest nation in the world. Tall dream wouldn’t you say?

3.2.2 A DETERMINED ACHIEVER

In the early days of our marriage, Pastor (Mrs.) Folu Adeboye, the GO's wife once told a writer, we used to quarrel. He would return from class at the school where he was a teacher, take his meal and immediately proceed to attack mathematical problems. Whenever I tried to take the books away from him he would pretend to need to ease himself only to go and lock himself in the toilet to attend to his mathematics. From his travails as the favourite of the late founder of The Redeemed Christian Church of God, Rev. Josiah Olufemi Akindayomi, to the present day, to say uneasy lies the head that wears the crown in describing Pastor Adeboye is an understatement. Once he sets his hearth to do carry out an assignment, Adeboye simply pulls all the plugs. He wanted the International Office at the Redemption City ready under a month; he simply moved floodlights to the site and personally supervised construction workers round the clock.

Some years ago, while worshippers gathered at the auditorium awaiting the arrival of the GO at a particular Special Holy Ghost Service, the unthinkable nearly happened. As Pastor Adeboye stepped out of his office to enter the four-wheel drive that would take him to the auditorium, the gangly man of over six feet in height staggered and nearly fell. When I am fasting I am fasting and when I am feeding I am feasting," those are the words of a man who would fast up to the point that one would wonder if he was on hunger strike for one fanatical cause or the other. To him, realising his dreams is so vital that no price is too high.

Having embarked on stretch fast – fasting without breaking at the end of the day – for several days would rise every night to conduct prayer walk around the Redemption City every night. When the event he has been preparing for comes, there he is standing at the pulpit to minister as if nothing had happened. Where he gets the energy to conduct those services is definitely beyond mere human explanation. One thing Pastor Adeboye understands is that there is nothing like a free lunch. There is always a price tag. So, whatever he desires – miracles for his congregation, financial breakthrough for projects or whatever, he is committed enough to pay the necessary price to make it happen.

3.2.3 The warrior

One aspect of Pastor Adeboye that is not easy to perceive is that he is primarily a man who operates with the instinct of a military man. His humble mien notwithstanding, he is one general one would not want to face with regular weapons. In the spiritual real especially and in church growth drive that reaches up the level of what business analysts would describe as mergers and acquisition, Pastor Adeboye is a dogged warrior. When you are fighting a wise man and he surrenders, he once told his ministers, know that you are finished. Strategies for conquering new territories and retaining those already in his possession are what Pastor Adeboye executes without even the closest people to him realising it. He is not a fire-fighter tactician.

Whatever brought the RCCG to where it is today did not begin today. From the formation of his ministry, Christ the Redeemer's Ministries, while Rev. Akindayomi was alive to the establishment of Christ the Redeemer's Friends Universal set up to reach out to the upper echelon of the society and other such tactical moves, Adeboye works within the framework of his vision making moves according to his long-time strategic moves. The Lord is a Man of war" is a favourite quote of his. And no doubt he does not perceive himself as a bastard. Like Father, like son, he is just as well a warrior as his heavenly Father.

3.2.4 Empire builder

When his friend, fellow Ijesa man co-lecturer at the same department and Christian Brother W. F. Kumuyi needed a location for his midweek Bible study and miracle service events, Adeboye did not hesitate to seek the help of his spiritual mentor, Rev. Akindayomi. When Kumuyi moved his mostly youthful crowd-pulling programmes away to go and establish the Deeper Life Bible Church contrary to his early expressed vision of only running a teaching ministry, Adeboye saw it not as a setback but as a stepping stone. Through his own ministry, he began his midweek services. One of the qualities of empire builders is that they convert disadvantages to stepping stones. Pastor Tunde Bakare started the first "model parish" for the RCCG. When he moved on with the entire congregation of over a thousand worshippers but for twelve to start Latter Rain Assembly, Pastor Adeboye simply picked up the pieces to build the success story the model church has become today. His vision of a parish of the church within every five minutes walking distance within Lagos has been surpassed. He is reaching out for greater heights.

3.2.5 Authority

Pastor Adeboye grew up under a father who was an authority figure in the true sense of it. He too does not care about hiding the fact that he believes in absolute loyalty to authority. As a student, the school Principal Rev. Canon Akinyemi who happened to have been from his Ifewara hometown helped him by allowing him to stay on in school even when his school fees were not paid. No doubt, the Anglican reverend gentleman must have played a role in securing a loan for Adeboye from the local Anglican Church. As a result, he would not join students to protest an act of the principal no matter how justified his colleagues were or what repercussion he might face later. Up till this day, Adeboye expects total loyalty. If anybody has any illusion of sharing of power in the RCCG hierarchy, the person should just seek out the mission's organogram.

Pastor Adeboye, the mathematician that he is, has fashioned out an ever-changing system that ensures nobody is in the position to challenge his authority. When Pastor Tony Rapu, one of the most outstanding "captains" in "General" Adeboye's army was growing too big, he ended up out in the cold – literally. His Freedom Hall parish was quartered and shared among four assistants while he was "exiled" to Europe. He ended up leaving the mission to start This Present House. The last Deputy General Overseer retired in 1998 and has not been replaced.

No Assistant General Overseer (AGO) knows what to expect from the GO who would move a retired secondary school principal from the position AGO Training to AGO Family Matter, whatever that means, and replace him with a retired carpenter! What used to be the highly exalted position of State Pastor is now Provincial Pastor with as much clout as the then Area Pastor. No matter what anybody says, such firm grip has helped Adeboye forge ahead with his plans for the ministry. Even the seeming anointed successors in the waiting of a few years ago had been sent to Siberias of missionary fields in past years.

3.2.6 A different person

Attempt to blend in makes a man nothing different from other people. Pastor Adeboye is a man who does not fear being different. While his contemporaries pursued glamour, he took the Gospel message to the world with humility and gentle men. Here is a man whose pen – one of the things he treasures in life – would pay for the glamorous fellow's entire attire, yet he would carry it in a way that displays no outward self aggrandisement. Sometimes ago, Pastor Adeboye had just three cars. One was a Lexus jeep, another Lincoln Navigator and the third a Lincoln Town Car, a sedan that requires servicing once in four years. Yet nobody would perceive him as being ostentatious. A sharp wit that cracks wonderful jokes, Adeboye does not really talk. He would rather communicate with even his immediate staff through notes – notes that are full of abbreviation that a new staffer has to learn his code! This sets him free to spend time in prayer and meditation, two things he does literally “without ceasing.”

Over the years, Pastor Adeboye has brought a lot of changes to the church he inherited in 1981. At the same time he has devised several ways and means for reaching the perishing world with the Gospel which is what he sees as his primary assignment. In all such pursuits, he does not shy away from being different. A state chief executive who is a Moslem invited him over to minister annually. He was always there to use the platform. However, some had had cause to criticise him for carrying along wrong fellows in the name of church growth.

Some glaring unchristian behaviours by some leaders had been overlooked while others paid highly for less sins – that is if there is anything like less sin. There was a year when the second wife of a prominent monarch and the second wife of a state chief executive were ordained in a church that is avowedly opposed to polygamy. However one looks at it, Pastor Adeboye takes it all in the stride and heads in the direction he feels God is leading him. Like all heroes of all times, he is not perfect. But in him is a mix of qualities that has helped him build what is probably the largest Pentecostal church in Africa. He yet dreams of making it the biggest in the world!

3.3 ADEBOYE'S CONTRIBUTION TO THE SPREAD OF THE GOSPEL

In 1981, when Adeboye took over, the ministry had a few dozen parishes. It is currently Nigeria's most ambitious evangelical project, establishing, according to the church, three parishes daily. It has an estimated 200 parishes in the USA. It also has in about 90 nations across Africa and Europe. It is easily the fastest growing church in the world. Last July, the church announced its plans to build a 10,000-capacity sanctuary in Floyd, Texas, USA. There is to be built on 500 acres of land bought at a cost of $1million. The land will also have two lecture theatres, a dormitory, cottages, lake and a Christian the med park. Back home, the church's might is unmissable. There is a parish within every five-minute drive, or in some cases less than that radius. But the church's most famous landmark is the Redemption Camp, a monstrously vast acreage located on the Lagos/Ibadan expressway.

It also has a good network of roads and other utilities. It is the site of the Redeemer's University of Nigeria (RUN) and a secondary school, Christ The Redeemer's School Movement, both owned by the church. Today, there are over 5000 Parishes of RCCG worldwide. RCCG is present on six continents except Antartica. There are over 300 parishes in North America. The most phenomenal programs of the RCCG are the Holy Ghost Night, and the Holy Ghost Congress, all-night prayer, worship, healing and miracle services, which take place at the Redemption City' near Logos, Nigeria. The Holy Ghost Night, a monthly event attracts on overage attendance of 500,000 people.

4.0 CONCLUSION

Of what use is being able to dream if one is not committed to pursuing it to logical conclusion? Late British Prime Minister Winston Churchill once spoke of an outstanding quality of the bulldog. When the bulldog grabs an object, one of its unique virtues is its ability to keep on breathing without letting go. From his childhood dreams to catching visions for growth for the mega church he leads, one of the secrets of Pastor Adeboye's success is his ability to dream of great things.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

David Olaniyi Oyedepo, affectionately called Papa by his followers is a Nigerian Christian author, Preacher and the founder and Presiding Bishop of Living Faith Church World Wide also known as Winners Chapel and its affiliated International churches known as Winners Chapel International, with headquarters in Ogun State, Nigeria. He is also the senior pastor of the acclaimed Faith Tabernacle, a 50,000 seat church auditorium reputed to be the largest church auditorium in the world by the Guinness Book of Records. He has been referred to as one of the most powerful preachers in Nigeria.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you should be able to:

- Challenge yourself to do great things for God
- Discuss Oyedepo's contribution to the growth of Christianity in Africa

- Articulate the need for using education to stabilize and grow Christianity.

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 EARLY LIFE

On September 27, 1954 David Olaniyi Oyedepo was born in Osogbo but is a native of Omu Aran, in Kwara state. He was born into a religiously mixed family: his father, Ibrahim, was a Muslim healer and his mother, Dorcas, was a member of the Eternal Order of the Cherubim and Seraphim Movement (C&S), a branch of the Aladura movement in Nigeria. He was raised by his grandmother in Osogbo, who inculcated into him the virtues of Christian life via the early morning prayers which she does attend with him. He taught him the importance of tithing. David was “born again” in 1969 through the influence of his teacher, one Ms. Betty Lasher, who took special interest in him during his high school days. He studied architecture at Kwara State Polytechnic and worked briefly with the Federal Ministry of Housing in Ilorin before resigning to concentrate on missionary work. Oyedepo also gained a Ph.D in Human Development from Honolulu University, Hawaii, United States of America.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

What lessons can we learn from Oyedepo’s early life?

3.2 CALL TO MINISTRY

According to David Oyedepo, he received a mandate from God through an 18 hour long vision in May 1981 to 'liberate the world from all oppression of the devil through the preaching of the word of faith'. This is the inaugural vision that led to the founding of the LFCWW, first called Liberation Faith Hour Ministries, in 1981. Two years after, on 17 September 1983, Pastor Enoch Adeboye, General Overseer of the Redeemed Christian Church of God, ordained David and his wife, Florence Abiola Akano (now known as Faith Abiola Oyedepo) to become pastors also officially commissioned the newly started church of Oyedepo. Five years after, Oyedepo was ordained a Bishop.

After the ministry was commissioned on September 17, 1983, church operations commenced in Kaduna the same year. Church services started with four members. Within a period of three years, the church multiplied greatly and attendance grew to thousands. Today that same church in Kaduna has well over 25,000 worshippers, holding multiple services on a 13-acre facility called the Garden of Faith in Kaduna, northern part of Nigeria. At the beginning, in a unique vision-sharing meeting of the Power House (a team of men and women that stood in the gap interceding for this great ministry at the onset), precisely on April 10, 1982, God gave Brother David, as he was known at that time, the following profound prophetic verdicts, which were declared to the people:

God said, "This ministry is not out to debate over doctrines, but to prove the power of the Holy Ghost." That is a power ministry connoting a flow of Signs and Wonders. Today, signs and wonders have become the trade mark of this ministry worldwide. Testimonies of the supernatural acts of God are shared in all our meetings everywhere. In September 1989, Bishop Oyedepo moved to Lagos in obedience to God's instruction to: "Get down to Lagos and raise me a people." The Lagos church started in a rented hall at 1A, New Era Road, Iyana Ipaja. From there, it moved to its own acquired 2.7 acre facility at 38, Raji Oba Street, Iyana Ipaja. There, a 3,000 capacity auditorium was built, which soon became inadequate for the ever-increasing worshippers at the Church. In January 1995, while praying in England for a larger space to accommodate the people, Bishop David Oyedepo received this word from God: "Why are you asking me for another land when you have not used the one I gave you?" So, the existing bungalow structures were pulled down and a four-storey L-shaped overflow facility and seven-storey office complex were built in their place. The buildings were all dedicated on Saturday, December 30, 1995.

These facilities were still not adequate to accommodate the people and canopies were erected to create more room for people. Yet, in no time the people spilled over to adjacent streets. To cater for them, multiple services grew up to five on Sundays and two on week days. The force behind the phenomenal growth of the ministry is epitomized in the anointed, proof-producing and life-applicable messages. This is in fulfilment of the instructions given to Bishop David Oyedepo early in ministry when he was bothered about the slow pace of the church growth.

The Lord told him, "Keep sowing the seed, (the word), and keep the grass green and the sheep will come to lie down there, for he make me to lie down in green pasture. By divine direction, the ministry established a number of outreaches in Lagos to spread the Word of Faith to liberate men, as God commanded in 1981. These multidimensional outreaches have made a lot of impact on the body of Christ worldwide. Such outreaches include publishing of books and other periodicals such as The Winners' World, Signs & Wonders Today, and training through the Word of Faith Bible Institute (WOFBI) that is committed to ministry and leadership training and through the church network in the home and foreign missions. Due to the increasing flow of people into Winners' Chapel, Lagos, with crowds spilling over to adjacent roads, and on decks of uncompleted buildings nearby and people standing for hours to listen to God's word, it became necessary to search for a larger place.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Highlight the uniqueness of the call of God on Bishop Oyedepo and discuss the importance of a call to anyone who wants to join the service of God.

3.3 Oyedepo's Contribution to the Spread of the Gospel

Oyedepo's church started in Kaduna, but moved to Lagos, the former capital of Nigeria in September 1989 to start a new branch of His Church, after receiving an instruction from God to reach out to the population in Lagos. This Church has gone on to become the International head quarters of His Church. Due to the increasing flow of people into His Church with crowds spilling over to adjacent roads, and on decks of uncompleted buildings nearby and people standing for hours to listen to His teachings, it became necessary to search for a larger place. This led to the building of the renowned Faith Tabernacle.

In 1998, Oyedepo set forth to build a new building to accommodate the increasing number of worshippers. This resulted in his Church's acquisition of the facility, known as Canaan land, which serves as the headquarters of His Church. Canaan land is in Ota, a suburb of Lagos and is presently the 5,000-acre (20 km estate and campus), that houses the 50,000-seat capacity auditorium, (the 'Faith Tabernacle', which is reputed to be the largest Church auditorium in the world. This was featured or also recorded by the Guinness Book of Records.), the church secretariat, the church's youth chapel, a primary school called Kingdom heritage model school, a full boarding mission secondary school called Faith Academy, with over 1,500 students and the its University facilities which accommodates over 7,000 students, fully resident in ultra-modern hostel facilities, with fully equipped faculty buildings and numerous staff housing facilities.

Canaan land campus also has for profit establishments operated by the church such as a bakery, a bottled water processing plant, a petrol station, various restaurants and shopping stores, several residential houses that provide for the over 2,000 church employees, and guest houses. Four banks are also present on this Estate, three of which are branches of external commercial banks and one which is a community and micro-finance Bank and operated by the Church. The speed of the construction of Faith Tabernacle was breath-taking, considering the size of the building. Construction of this gigantic project was completed within 12 months, which experts claim could only have been a miracle, because such a project should normally take a minimum of three years to complete. Reports also claimed that this building was built debt free. This 50,000-seat edifice was dedicated in September 18, 1999 under the administration of former President Olusegun Obasanjo.

3.3.1 Christian Ministry

The teachings of Oyedepo have put him in the category of what is commonly called the Word of Faith Movement. He has referred to principal exponents of the Faith Movement such as Kenneth Copeland, Gloria Copeland, the late Kenneth Hagin, T.L Osborn, Smith Wiggles Worth as well as renowned Nigerian preachers Enoch Adeboye and the late Benson Idahosa as mentors. The teachings of Oyedepo are grouped under a range of topics called '12 pillars of faith', which include: Faith, The Word, Prosperity, the Holy Spirit, Praise, Consecration, the Supernatural, Wisdom, Prayer, Success, Vision and Healing. The Overall focus of His teachings centre around Faith in God's, Prosperity and Miracles. He teaches that faith in the word of God is the key to a life of God's blessings and security of the works of the devil. His teachings on prosperity are aimed at empowering people to live free from poverty, particularly the African continent. He describes his own teaching on prosperity as “covenant software for programming yourself into victories and triumphs.

His Church (Winners Chapel) also operates a Bible training programme known as Word of Faith Bible Institute for members and non-members alike to develop knowledge of Christian principles and to develop leaders and future pastors. This institute is run in major branches of the Church. Oyedepo who operates like the “Chief Executive Officer” of a conglomerate, is the President of David Oyedepo Ministries International (DOMI). DOMI is the umbrella organisation comprising Living Faith Church World Wide (a global network of churches), World Mission Agency (WMA); the global missionary arm of the church's operations, Dominion Publishing House; the publishing arm of the church, Covenant University, and the Social Development Missions projects (made up of hospitals, maternity homes, schools, etc.

3.3.2 Criticisms and controversy

Oyedepo has received much criticism from many in the Christian community as focusing on prosperity.

SELF ASSESSMENT EXERCISE

Discuss the major factor(s) behind the growth of Living faith World Wide

4.0 CONCLUSION

Oyedepo's socio-economic endeavours include founding educational institutions based on Christian principles for primary, secondary and tertiary stages of formal Education to empower the young generation develop the human capacity and improve the educational system in Nigeria and Africa. This has led to the establishment of kingdom heritage model schools in different cities in Nigeria for primary education, Faith

Academy; a missionary full boarding secondary school and Covenant University .Covenant University was opened to students on October 21, 2002 and was adjudged to be the best private university in Nigeria as of 2005. Today, they have mission stations in about 68 cities and towns spread over 30 nations on the continent of Africa, where great Churches have been built with large followership. We have also established Churches in Britain and United States of America.

1.0 INTRODUCTION

Dr. Kolawole Daniel Olukoya is anointed by God with an uncommon gift and finds expression as a prophet, evangelist, teacher and preacher of the word of God. In addition to his over 80 scientific publications, he has written more than double that number of spiritual books, 150 of them, most of which are bestsellers. PRAYER RAIN, a prayer manual which has become a companion of not a few Christians across several denominations, has sold millions of copies. Besides, Dr. Olukoya has 70 Christian songs that he has composed. His amiable life and that of his wife, Pastor Shade and their son, Elijah Toluwani, are living proof that all power belongs to God.

2.0 OBJECTIVES

By the end of this unit, you should be able to:

- Draw personal motivation from the humble beginning of Mountain of Fire and Miracles Church

- Describe the contribution of Daniel Olukoya to the growth of Christianity in Africa
- Explain what makes Mountain of Fire and Miracles unique

3.0 MAIN CONTENT

3.1 Early Life

When Dr. Kolawole Daniel Olukoya was born some forty five years ago, little did his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Olukoya, know that they had taken delivery of an exceptional child ordained by God to fulfill a destiny that would in turn, positively affect the destiny of others? Mountain of Fire and Miracles Ministries began in an unusual way. Twenty-two years ago, Dr. Daniel Kolawole Olukoya summoned a prayer meeting, which was attended by 23 interdenominational Christians on a Wednesday, in a not-too-large living room of one of them, their combative spirit just wanted to pray and nothing more. The location of their routine meeting neither promised nor portrayed the possibility of a vibrant church emerging from the sheer commitment of twenty-four like-minded Christians. Back in 1989, after the initial cradle and host of the meeting became too compacted, it was relocated to 60 Old Yaba Road.

The first Wednesday meeting was summoned, but later on, the voice of providence kept calling for subsequent meeting and history was set to be made as the voice of few Christians were to later amplify and multiply into a roar of thunderous prayers across the world. Soon after the informal inauguration of the prayer meeting, the power of God brought down through prevailing prayers began to work verifiable miracles in the lives of men. Neighbours started responding to the appeal of power display during the meetings and the supernatural manifestation among these Christians became hot news, spreading like the harmattan fire. Naturally, the power of God evangelized the environment, pulled the crowd and kept the group going and growing. The location became too small to accommodate seekers and beneficiaries of God's miracles. What started in a living room became an exercise that obstructed traffic flow in the environment as teeming crowd grew in amazing proportions.

The prayer meeting was not only a menace to the powers of darkness whose palpable hold upon the lives of men met and surrender to the superior onslaught of divine power, the local Government authority in the area was jolted to the looming awareness and impact of the Wednesday meetings. As frantic search for an alternative place of their meeting continued, with so many besetting hindrances such as lack of resources to acquire available options, respite seem to come their way when a slum was offered for their use. The slum was a fairly large piece of land with irregular dimensions. Sprawling around the second game of the University of Lagos, it was abandoned for its notorious records. The slum was a hideout of criminals and the last home of reptiles whose natural habitat in the environment had been demolished by construction workers. The criminals were poised to defend their illegal territory and the reptiles were prepared to give their last, killing bite to anyone who ventured into their midst. As the snakes where ready to inject the last drop of their venom into any foot, the scorpions were ready to sting any hand and the criminals were equipped with killing threats and dangerous weapons.

The conquering spirits of the power of God, whose impact had drawn a crowd, would not surrender to any threat or recoil from any danger. They relished in the power of their prayer and took over the land, dislodging men, demons and animals. The young man whose living room hosted the Wednesday meetings was Dr. Daniel Kolawole Olukoya and the slum the group purchased at that time has transformed into the International Headquarters church of the Mountain of Fire and Miracles Ministries (MFM). The name of the church was revealed to Dr. Olukoya during normal prayer. He later became the General Overseer (G.O) of the church, which had its first service on April 24 1994, at 13 Olasimbo Street, Onike, Yaba, which is now the headquarters. The crowd kept coming to the prayer meeting at the new location and their population kept increasing, living the twenty-four original members with the challenge of crowd management, growth and expansion management.

3.2 The Spread of Mountain of Fire and Miracles

Mountain of Fire (MFM) evolved a strategy of networking to start new branches in every state capitals, local government headquarters, senatorial districts and localities. Across the world on weekly basis, MFM branches spring up as one of the fastest growing churches of this time. International branches first started in London, moving to the Americas USA and Canada, with the new thrust in Eastern Europe and the Caribbean. On every continent, MFM is profoundly visible and greatly impact full. The smooth running of the church owes its success to the administrative responsibilities of four Assistant General Overseers (AGOs). Supporting the AGOs are 8 Senior Regional Overseers, 41 Assistant Regional Overseers across the country's geo political zones and twenty others oversee the church's mission abroad.

Besides, MFM has a number of senior pastors and other ministers who cater for the spiritual needs of the ever-growing church. The church teaches do-it-yourself way of praying where individuals are trained to pray and receive answers on their own. Its peculiar style of operation generated great misconceptions by Christians in many other assemblies until they gradually began to imbibe its aggressive way of praying. Criticism attended its method of praying aloud and bodily movement, which many described as too unconventional to Christian norms in the art of praying. However, MFM teaches that such aggressive way of praying is an aid to spiritual focus and a check against being overwhelmed by the flesh. About the most notable feature of the MFM is deliverance. From the nooks and crannies of the country, people from all works of life: Non Christians, Christians, men and women of high social status, academics, illiterates, business professionals, to mention a few, throng the church on daily basis to undergo deliverance programmes.

All over its branches, deliverance ministration is cardinal to the operations of MFM and the church's prayer city provides greater opportunity for seekers of deliverance. A couple of tribal deliverance programmes also hold on monthly basis as the church holds the 'Oge Nnaputa Ndi Igbo' (Igbo Deliverance Programme) at 5 p.m every second Thursday of the month while the Yoruba Deliverance Programme , 'Wakati Idande' , is held the same time on the third Thursday of the month at the at the International Headquarter church. MFM believes and teaches that everyone needs deliverance of some sort, depending on background and exposure to sinful activities. For any degree of liberation required, what it takes to undergo deliverance in MFM is willingness to be free and a vowed aggression against the adversary; no fees are charged.

MFM has set up various schools to train members and non-members specific areas of human capacity development. After all, Dr. Olukoya himself is a renowned academic whose outstanding success has become a reference point in the hall of fame. Before their recent autonomy in 2008, MFM was running 19 ministry related schools under the church's Institute of Spiritual Warfare (INSWAR). Fifteen of these schools are run with curricular guide to prepare men and women for the service of God while the Mountain Top Nursery and Primary Schools and Mountain Top Secondary School, as well as Mountain Top University in view, provide a balance of sound academic training with the fear of God. Dr. Olukoya is instilling the culture of reading in his members; he encourages them to read at least one book a month. The church membership as it is everywhere is heterogeneous. Top government officials, scholars, renowned business moguls, professionals and people with vocational training sit together with the uneducated to learn at the feet of the Lord.

The simplicity of the General Overseer has moulded the worshipers into a life of humility such that personal status and achievements are not advertised in a show of superiority. But from a distance, some observers erroneously assume that the church is a congregation of the un-educated. Also at the prayer city another interdenominational programme branded 'Power Must Change Hands' holds on every first Saturday of every month to allow for wider participation. It is a solution evangelism programme that came into existence according to the scriptural provision in Mathew 17:21. Although, most MFM programmes are with fasting, this is particularly different because a whole day fasting is recommended; participants eat their last meal on Thursday night and break after the prayer programme on Saturday. 70 days prayer and fasting is an annual programme of the church in which every member is encouraged to participate. According to Dr. Olukoya, 'some mountains will not fall unless they are bombarded with the artillery of prayer and fasting.

The prayer city started as a fulfilment of prophecy. Besides, Dr. Olukoya wanted a place where prayers could be offered round the clock without disturbance. Conceived as a prayer retreat ground, the prayer city on kilometre 12, Lagos Ibadan Expressway began with the purchase of 54 hectares of land. Overtime more pieces of land have been acquired by the church activities and ongoing construction work at the location is on the increase. The first service was held on the ground of the prayer city in July 1995. At the prayer city, prayer and deliverance go on simultaneously round the clock. The city means many things to many people: a place of refuge, a level ground for prayer exercise, miracle spot and a meeting point for armies of heaven and mortal warriors.

List and discuss five key factors that influenced the growth of Mountain of Fire and Miracles

3.3 Olokoya's Contribution to the Spread of the Gospel

The music ministry of MFM is like an industry of professionalism, high level of commitment and rigorous training. The church sings contemporary songs, classical, jazz blues, acapella, negros and solos to create a balanced music ministry under the directorship of Sister Banke Ademola. The G.O and his wife, Mrs. Shade Olukoya also a pastor, are specialist musical performers and once in a while on special occasions, they do joint songs to the admiration of the congregation. Shade is a great soloist who performs as the spirit leads and on special occasions. Although the MFM does not use drums and other local musical instruments, its use of the organ, the guitar, the piano and several other stringed instruments has perfected its music for soul wining and edification of the body of Christ. In his commitment to the music ministry, the G.O purchased an Allen organ at about $200,000 which has been reputed as the biggest of its kind in Africa. The six step musical organ took the agents of the world's famous manufacturer from US some weeks to assemble at the international headquarter, Onike, Iwaya, Lagos.

3.3.1 Olokoya's Love for Youth

Concerning the youth in the country, Dr. Olukoya was burdened by their sense of loss of focus. Hence, the church has embarked on repositioning them. According to the G.O, "The youth have lost focus and the devil may harvest them if left to their ways as a lot of them indulge in various shades of crimes and vices". He said the Holy Spirit directed him to embark on a 70-point agenda to reposition the youth, which started in 2007, and most of the programmes on the 70-point have started yielding results. The football team of MFM, tagged D. K Olukoya Football Club played a friendly match with the national under-23 team that ended with a draw. At the end of the match three of the club's members were called into the national team. Some other members of the D. K Olukoya Football Club have been offered international football contracts by foreign clubs. The youth who were dissipating their energy in wrong and wasteful endeavours have now found focus and fulfillment in profitable ventures. Not only in football are the new converts making waves; they are also breaking ground in all other areas of the 70-point agenda. Some of the programmes on the agenda include cooking, talent hunt, singing/music, bible quiz among others.

Realizing the need for a special attention to the youth's spiritual life, in April 2008, MFM set up its youth church of which services run simultaneously with the adults' church regular service at different venues in the same neighbourhood. The idea is fast spreading in the Lagos region of the church where many branches are now putting their youth church in place. Again Dr. Olukoya's visionary and distinctive leadership style has proved the church's embrace of dynamism, within scriptural confines, in a world of fast changing values. Critiques of the church's mode of services and disposition to relevant and scriptural changes have been proved wrong. Presently, the population of the youth is about 4,000 and the fold is still increasing in number.

Breaking the church into groups, teams and department defined by functions, age bracket and mission is a profitable strategy of church growth in MFM. For instance, the church's Women Foundation, headed by Pastor (Mrs.) Shade Olukoya, has many groups of women under it. The church's welfare group caters for the needy in the society, coordinates the collection and distribution of gifts and donation to the widows, the less privilege and prisons. Mountain of Fire and Miracles Ministries, is a Do-it-yourself full Gospel Ministry dedicated to the revival of apostolic signs and wonders, Holy Ghost fireworks and the unlimited power of God to deliver to the uttermost.

3.3.2 Achievements

And in pursuit of that destiny, Dr. Olukoya laid down an academic blueprint whose pedigree remains outstanding. At Saint John's CAC Primary School, Akure in Ondo State, and Saint Jude's primary School, Ebute Metta, Lagos where he completed his primary education, excellence was his watch word. Rather than occupy himself with exuberance that was a common feature among the, youths, he developed a passion for God. Dr. Daniel Olukoya's academic profile took a leap while at Methodist Boys' High School, Lagos, where he graduated with Grade One Distinction and was the best student in his set. Not one known to rest on his oars, he took his academic exploits to the prestigious University of Lagos and, as would be expected, the genius in him proved that all earlier outstanding academic results were no fluke, as he graduated with a first class honours degree. In fact it was the first from the department since the university was established in 1962.

Dr. Olukoya's thirst for more academic laurels found expression at the University of Reading, UK, where, with a Commonwealth scholarship, he studied for a PhD in Molecular Genetics, which was completed in record time, making him probably the first Nigerian to obtain a Ph.D. in this subject area. With such an intimidating academic resume! It was only natural that opportunities would beckon. But not even the pressure. To stay back in England could sway him from returning to Nigeria. His first port of call on arrival was the Nigerian Institute of Medical Research (NIMR), Yaba. He was a lecturer as well as external examiner to a number of Nigerian universities, among them the University of Lagos, UNILAG and university of Benin, UNIBEN. Dr. olukoya is on record as having been the first scientist to establish an indigenous Molecular Biology and Biotechnology laboratory in Nigeria. One important contribution by Dr. Olukoya to biotechnology and health care delivery is the creation of a new type of Pap (Ogi), named Dogik, a weaning food that has improved nutritional qualities that can control diarrhoea.

The laboratory also ranks among the first to done genes in Nigeria. Dr. Olukoya has supervised over 20 Ph.D. students, most of who are doing well in their chosen fields. As a researcher, he has over 80 scientific publications to his credit. Notwithstanding his exploits on the academic turf, he devotes much of his time to God through preaching, delivering papers at seminars, singing etc. That Dr. Olukoya would become a mighty tool in the hands of God to serve as a vehicle of deliverance for his generation manifested in 1989, when Mountain of Fire and Miracles Ministries was given birth to in his sitting room at Yaba, with 24 worshippers. And like the story of the acorn seed that metamorphosed into the great oak tree with several branches providing nests to all birds of varied proportions, Mountain of Fire and Miracles Ministries, with only 18 years presence, has exponentially own to be found in several, arts of the world, even as 2007 has been expressly declared by the General Overseer as the year for evangelism.

4.0 CONCLUSION

MFM has thousands of branches spread across Nigeria, Africa and Asia. A huge percentage of branches are also located in the United States and Europe. The Ministry is noted for its unique, powerful prayers that are fast redefining the major strategic input that puts the devil and his cohorts in the most bemused of confusion. It is a ministry devoted to the revival of apostolic signs. Holy Ghost fire, miracles and the unlimited demonstration of the power of God word to deliver to the utmost. Absolute holiness is preached within and outside as spiritual prerequisite for heaven.
